5. Ham radio will die a slow ugly death when CW is eliminated.

I suggest you two, plus Markie, Opus and stay out of this thread. It's only for people like me that want to protect and preserve the quality & integrity of the amateur radio service. People like you, John Smith, Opus, Lenny and Markie want to destroy it because you believe people shouldn't have to learn anything or be good at anything to be a ham radio

Not always, Len. You've often gone on and on and on and on and on about who you are and what you've done, but sometimes you have not identified yourself in a posting at all.

Here's one example:

Back in September of 2000, you posted here as "Avery Fine" (averyfine@aol.com).
None of those posts you wrote as "Avery Fine" had your name or other clear identification in them.

In that same month, you were also using the screen name "Len Of 21" (lenof21@aol.com). At least one thread contains posts from you as "Lenof21" and also posts from you as "Averyfine", without any clear indication that both of them are you.

But that's not all.

On October 1, 2003, you denied ever posting to rrap as "Avery Fine".

Here's a link:

http://groups.google.com/group/rec.radio.amateur.policy/msg/1a0ba1d7f097f7df?dmode=source&
hl=en

And a direct quote from that posting (ID added so you can tell who wrote what):

N2EY wrote:

">And we've all seen your even-more-prodigious output here in this newsgroup,
>Len. Under a wide variety of AOL screen names - nocwtest, lenof21, averyfine, >averyfineman, lenover21, and probably more."

To which you replied:

"I have never used "Avery Fine" as a screen name. "Len Of 21" is my primary AOL screen name. Someone else has "No CW Test."

I have used NO other screen names in here."

You not only posted anonymously, you later denied it. When you wrote

"I have never used "Avery Fine" as a screen name' and

"I have used NO other screen names in here."

you were telling an untruth, Len. Some would say you were trying to deceive us.

Of course all this was pointed out to you:

http://groups.google.com/group/rec.radio.amateur.policy/msg/7ca90f2b0a99485f?dmode=source&
hl=en

After all that, who are you to demand others' identity, or to criticize their attempts to be anonymous?

And why should we believe you when you say you've never tried to be anonymous here?

Besides, what's wrong with anonymous posting?

Neither Brian Burke's name nor callsign appears anywhere in his postings as "hot-ham-and-cheese". "Leo", who described himself as a radio amateur in Canada, would not give his callsign nor full name. In many of your postings, your name does not appear at all.

There are many other examples.

Yet you have no problem with those anonymous posters.

If that's OK for them to do, and it's OK for you to post as "nocwtest", "averyfine", "averyfineman", and possibly
many other screen names,
what's wrong with others doing the same thing?

Or do you have a double standard?

Been there, done that!

I just looked at the license requirements as likened to the responsibility of owning a dog. If you are going to own a dog, you are going to pick up some poop! Code is much the same to owning a station, as poop is to owning a dog, it's almost a 1:1 correlation.

Yeah, but I have high speed. I can afford it. You, well now I understand why you like CW so much. It goes well with the spark gap that you use...of course most hams have real equipment, but you can only use what you can kludge together with old beer cans and salvaged copper wire.

indeed to return the card doesn't he have to confirm the freq and time?

i don't do that much but I thought it was needed to make it valid

SC:

Sometimes I am convinced that you are an excellent "satire comedian." Other times, you have me convinced you are for real. Sometimes you have me busting a gut and laughing until tears come, other times you yank my heart-stings in pity.

Take this last post of your, it can be viewed as tongue-in-cheek satire, or, it can be viewed as insane rant.

Certainly you cannot place much importance on CW. Amateurs have a real purpose, to expand radio on ALL frontiers. Help in the community, help in educating the youth in radio, help in disasters, help in developing techniques, equip., theory development, etc. (the list really goes on-and-on here)

Probably the least important aspects of all this is rag chewing, contesting, favoritism of individuals and groups, etc. They are fun for some and amateur radio has a place for these activities, but these are self-serving and we must be careful least amateurs on a whole end up being judged on such self-serving behaviors. However, when we are taking from amateur radio for our own personal goals, likes and entertainment we are NOT giving. Or, put simply, I can easily imagine Einstein, Tesla, De Forest, Bell, etc. having a great interest in radio, however, I am in doubt as to them getting excited about having to learn morse to obtain the license.

So, when you go crying "the sky is falling" over amateur radio progressing and dropping an ancient tradition of morse testing, how can any logical mind view you as NOT being self-serving, how can anyone take you seriously at all? Are you a con man attempting to sell us the idea that you really see great benefit in CW? That CW is a major part of radio in 2006? Come on man, anyone crying such nonsense is going to be called on those cons schemes immediately.

You see CW as being a real barrier, something that many who desperately want to become amateurs will avoid and by so avoiding fail to obtain an amateur license. Certainly you cannot really believe that; you can see how people would view you as deranged if you held such views, can't you?

If someone really wants an amateur license, it they are so devoted to hero worship of amateurs as your were--they will end up with that license in their back pocket--even some uneducated and mentally challenged person from the back swamps of DumbBuck Egypt can learn to tap that code if he/she is driven.

I think as a young man, you viewed amateurs in some form of hero worship. I think you viewed them as larger than life. I am afraid that once you obtained your license, these fantasies did not fade. Indeed, you wove these fantasies into your ego and your ego became dependent on your amateur license hanging on your wall. You recognized that if a very large number of people had amateur licenses (say the same number who hold fishing licenses or drivers licenses or contracting licenses, etc.) your feeling of being "special" would go away. So, you began to plot. You began to find ways you felt would stop people from getting licenses and get behind those ideas and push them and sell them. You certainly knew there were other such individuals as yourself out there and they would come to your aid. Indeed, I do not even think you were the one to come up with the original idea, I think that would have been beyond you. Someone else came up with the idea, you just jumped on his/her bandwagon.

So, now we arrive here. And, you are indeed correct, CW does make some shy away from amateur radio. The reward of having an amateur license is just not big enough for them to learn a set of dits and dahs to send messages with, frankly, I see Einstein never bothered. I guess you look at this as a "winning" situation, I do not. I look at it as a evil self-centered plan which you and others are engaged in to limit amateur radio, and it just kind-of-got-that-way because no one has taken you to task.

I know of no good reasons to maintain any CW requirement in amateur testing. Even learning it for historical reasons does not justify the expenditure of time and effort it requires just to purchase a radio, buy an antenna and grab up a mic (and that is exactly what the large majority of amateurs are today, code tapping appliance users.)

In all your rants I see no real reasons for maintaining the CW requirement. In fact, when you are hard pressed and under attack, you admit to having your self-centered self at the core of you manipulations.

If you think I hate you, I do not. If you think I see you as the most evil person I have ever conversed with, I do not--I have some neighbors much worse. I just don't understand you. And, why that is, is because no one here is attempting to "win" by eliminating morse. We are attempting to win by making amateur radio enticing enough to fill our ranks with new bright minds, something YOU SHOULD place much more importance on. Indeed, CW pales in comparison when viewed side-by-side.

Let me leave you with one important "vision" to dwell upon. Next time you are a social event, a cocktail party, a civic function, etc. and you find someone, or some group who is really, really impressed with you being an amateur radio operator--then, right at that time, take a really, really good look at those people who are so all impressed and tell me if it really matters that you impress "those people?" If you say yes, you and I don't even live in the same universe.

Regards,
JS

Interesting. Does speach apply to CW? After all, it is a non-voice form of operation.

Can I assume by that you mean that you never learned to spell?

OK, neither did I, but then again my news reader has a spell-checking program.

I am a no-code op. Removing the requirement for CW neither dumbs down the HAM service, nor makes it more intelligent. CW is a niche form of operation anymore. Some people enjoy it for reasons that I cannot personally fathom, but what the heck, if its their thing then let them have at it. More power to them. CW is no longer the main mode of operation used anywhere in the world. Phone is. CW has no "practical" use any longer, it is used for entertainment only. Again, more power to those who choose to do it. Removing the 5wpm requirement for more advanced licensing only makes sense. No one requires anyone to know PSK31 or RTTY now do they? The FCC does not add that as a specific element of the testing process because it is a "mode" of operation, no more or less than CW is. Knowing and being able to operate CW does not make one more of a man, more of a woman, smarter, taller, slimmer, or better looking. Its just another mode of operation, one that is going into retirement slowly and painfully. Why not just let those who enjoy it, do so, and let the rest of us get on with expanding the hobby into new areas that technology make available to us. Why force us to regress 30 years instead of allowing those who enjoy CW to learn and participate in the revolution that technology is providing for the Amateur Radio Service?

sure it does

which is ilrelavant to the fact that the ARS would be better off if it were banned

staing that the ARS would be better if CW USE were banned is not the same as calling for it to be to be that you choose imply it is is indicative of your lack of skill with english or in your lack of belief in the free speech rights of all the facts you object and insinate that I lack the free speech to state my opinion is IMO indicative that you don't truely believe in free speech etc for yourself

He isn't driving "me" away from ham. People like him - come and go every day in my life. I look past them.
I just wish "others" in "here" did that! His posts are ruining "these"

And for what it is worth, I've been an Extra for about 12 years now. No one yet - knows what SC is/was! He's never said, that "I" know of. Though I have my "Extra" - I kept my "Novice" call sign.

Most people get up early, fatso, because they have to be at work, you

You have no rights, queer.
And you can't even count to three, dumbass, since you have no

Pot kettle black, fatass, you are afraid to use your real address and

The only thing you do for anybody is provide cheap entertainment as you

You probably got your ass spanked with a teacher's pointer in that special ed class many times when you were younger. That's what causes these reading comprehension problems, I take it?

I don't get SSI, stupid, and never did. Looks like you fucked up again!

I see that instead of answering the points made in the post, you chose simply to snip it all to make this comment.

I'm not surprised, of course...Your answers could only have ben lies.

I see you finally gave up generating new lies and chose to simply go for the cheap shots.

I'm not surprised...You've gone through life trying to do things

I don't dig out new NG's to crosspost your crap to, Morkie.

I even do my best to make sure I cut out all other NG's from these posts, including the CAP NG and all the REC. RADIO posts, with very narrow exceptions.

And Morkie...Stop posting Mularkie and no one can respond by saying it's just more of it.....

It does.

But the two of you need to read the regs and see what constitutes a violation of FOUO...Not that I'd expect either of you to use real facts to base yuor posts on...

Morkie I can understand...But Brain is allegedly a senior NCO in the Air Force...He should know better, but obviously doesn't.

Not surprising, I guess, consiodering the company he keeps.

No, I've been rubbing your nose in your lying and misconduct.

Even yoiu admit to the legal investigations being conducted against you, yet you act as if it's my fault...Stop being an abusing deviate and the cops will go away...Maybe you won't have to keep trying to move farther and farther away to avoid the long arm of the law.

More incompetence in English, Morkie.

That can be interpreted in one of several different ways....that's why people keep after you to fix your functional illiteracy...but you stubbornly insist on looking stupid intentionally...What's up with that?

And soon Morkie will be joining them.

Then "she's" a bigger idiot than you are, Morkie, and I hope you show "her" this exact post and let her know I said it.

Guess I missed it.

W5AMY would have my scrotum bronzed if she THOUGHT I was cheating on her, let alone actually do it...Not to mention the flailing I'd take for potentially bringing AIDS home from buttwhacking some hombre...

But I guess you don't have to worry about insurance, eh? Welfare takes care of all of that...

So far, Morkie, you've not provided an iota of evidence to the contrary.

However you HAVE validated your gayness several times over.

Until the photographic evidence to the contrary arrives, you might as well just suck it up and live with the FACT that ALMOST EVERYONE here believes you're "married" to a man.

> and nothing I do will save me any greid you will contiue to harras me

I've already TOLD you, in this OPEN FORUM, what would save you the

HERE'S THE DEAL, MORKIE!

First of all, you have my word posted here in this forum, that any snail mail that I receive from you will NOT show up in RRAP.

Secondly, take a picture of you and your "wife" standing next to each other. You will hold up a copy of USA Today to validate the date of the picture, and "Gav" will hold a sign that CLEARLY states "My Name Is Gavrielah Hojnacki And I Am Mark Morgan's Wife".

"She" must be dressing in something that clearly proves "she" is female. You might even get her to stand slightly oblique so we can see what ought to be a VERY pregnant belly by now....

Send this to my QRZ CBA. Do this, and you will get a complete, unconditional apology from me on RRAP.

DON'T do it, and accept the consequences of your INACTION.

Admission that you are a pervert. That's all that's needed to perpetuate the insistance that you're "married" to a man.

You HAVE "done injury", Mork.

A "lune"...?!?!

"stave"...

More incompetence in English.

All you've made clear is that you're a liar, a probable child molester, an abuser of the elderly, a sexual deviate, and that you're functionally illiterate.

And here's the quote to prove your lying:

That I have other obligations and duties that keep me from sitting

I don't have one of those...I do have a pair of Argyle socks a

Obviously you CAN'T say obssessed, nor can you even type it letter-by-letter....

You've only convinced yourself that you "fooled" anyone, Morkie.

You started fooling yourself as soon as you tried the "I am a colonel..." routine, stupidly thinking that anyone who knew anything about the officer structure would even remotely believe that anyone as incompetent in English as you were then and continue to be today could be one step away from a flag-rank.

Yeah.

Right.

Oh...and here's a quote for you FROM you...

Your what?

"under what names/IDs he's posted under"?

You asked about "aliases".

You don't answer my questions. Why should I answer yours?

You have used a variety of screen names here, many of which have no relation to your callsign (N0IMD) or name (Brian P. Burke). Nor do you write your name or callsign in most of your posts here. You claim it is to "avoid spam" or some such...

Perhaps "Slow Code" and "Blackguard Vox Deus" are/were simply trying to "avoid spam".

If it's OK for you, and "Len", and "Leo", it should be OK for them.

> and it becomes all about Len.

Len made an untrue statement. I commented on it.

I never said the Army lied to me, Morkie.

A civilian clerk made a mistake. Unlike you, I don't call every mistake a "lie".

I never said the 47th Field Hospital never existed.

I said your "47th CSB (Provisional) never existed, and indeed, even links YOU have provided have substantiated that claim.

To this date you've not provided ONE IOTA of a valid tour of duty in the Armed Forces as either an Officer or as an Enlisted.

You are the one who said your father had forced himself on your

And where was the Keroean war fought?

I don't find a place called Keroea...

I haven't. I just rub YOUR nose in YOUR droppings, Morkie...

The level of #### is yours, Morkie

> he is clearly afaid that someone at CAP will see what abusive and unfit

Morkie, people from CAP have ALREADY SEEN YOUR POSTS.

They asked me "what's this all about".

I showed them your "I am a colonel" posts.

They've read your profanity and admissions of sexual deviance.

They have read your "Yes, I lie and I will lie when it suits me to do so" posts

They have read your admissions to being investigated for child molestation and elder abuse.

They've seen your posts admitting to making the posts to the alt.cap site only because you saw my reference to CAP on my QRZ bio and your expectation that by trying to intimidate me by threatening my CAP membership I'll not reposnd to your RRAP posts.

So you go right ahead and keep crossposting to the alt.military.cap site if you want to, but they already HAVE YOUR NUMBER.

I keep your posts about how you crosspost to the CAP site (such as this one here) for the purpose of trying to intimidate me on disk.

They are also keenly aware that I do not post in this forum in such a way as to appear as to be representing CAP. That in and of itself established YOUR stalking and intimidation by trying to involved CAP in a non-CAP issue.

You are your own worst enemy, Morkie. Your own words and deeds have undermined any "argument" you ever had.

Thanks.

You cross post to the CAP site despite the fact that that organization is not involved in these exchages.

Your crossposting is a cowardly act of intimidation that's not working, simply because they've had an opportunity to see what a flake you are...Your words, nothing else.

It's an urban legend. No truth to it.

The Brits wave two fingers, with the back of the hand towards the person insulted. Basically the "V for Victory" gesture reversed. Nobody who knows anything about archery pulls a bowstring with just the middle finger - they use two fingers.

That 2 finger gesture was reportedly used at Agincourt, but didn't originate there.

It reportedly derives from the practice that captured archers, if not immediately executed or sold into slavery, would have those two fingers cut off by the capturing enemy.

Yep, those medievals were real nice guys....

To anyone with even an elementary understanding of anonymous proxies, anonymous remailers, zombie backdoors, etc., the ability to change ones IP address and header details is simplistic, indeed, with little time spent anyone can appear to be "coming" from anywhere in the world.

You waste my time. Worse, you think us all idiots here. You remind me of the "street smart" prosecutors and defense attorneys who stack jurys with members of little or no technical knowledge and then call in "expert witnesses" and propose arguments of technical details to boggle their minds.

You have only proven that you, yourself are either ignorant to such technical details, or else you are indeed street smart, I favor the latter in this case (however, if you in the dark about such things, 15 minutes on google will enlighten you.)

"Entertained?" :-) Hardly. I took off for three weeks to rid my environment of all the sociopathic meanderthals that inhabit this Din of Inequity.

I come back and its like the ghost of Claude Rain's character in the movie "Casablanca" has been whispering to me..."all the usual suspects" have been rounded up and imprisoned in here. :-)

It's truly remarkable to see this totally-retro group of frustrated "radio operators" thinking the radio world hasn't changed for 60-70 years...all of them thinking they "know what is right" for a radio hobby...because what They do is absolutely the Best and all should emulate what They do.

Where is Paul Schleck these days? Here it is 1 December and his "threatening" troika of "moderators" haven't yet appeared.
I wonder if he has been appointed to a new cabinet post? You know, the "Department of Hamland Security"... :-)

I vote for "insane rant." :-)

I disagree somewhat there.

For one thing, a HOBBY (which is what amateur radio really is) has only one purpose: To be fun to do, an enjoyable pastime.
For many it has a fascination about it, a quasi-magical quality of humans being able to communicate far beyond their natural means...using technologies that are abstract and unseen by natural senses.

Beyond that, though, I'd say the "educating youth, help in disasters," etc., is a lot of bullshit self-serving, selfimmortalizing PROPAGANDA. Such propaganda is a cover-up for just having personal fun OR, more likely, personal bunting to festoon themselves as "hero/savior/genius/savant/expert" so that they can APPEAR as Better Than Others.

>So, when you go crying "the sky is falling" over amateur radio

I certainly don't take him as "serious." :-)

I doubt that. When the rest of the radio world has GIVEN UP on using morse code mode, trying to be a con man for something obsolete is DUMB.

Blowcode isn't deranged, he seems FRUSTRATED. He is one of many humans needing some exclusitivy, some recognition for what he thinks is a Real Accomplishment. He doesn't seem to be able to keep up with technology (he is dumbeddown on theory) so he decries no-coders as "dumbed down." Psychological Transferance. Castigating others for his own inability to keep up wih already-changed times.

Blowcode isn't the only victim of that very-correct observation, John.

These morsemen have been greatly aided by the obvious pro-code propaganda pushed by the ARRL for decades. Since the ARRL is virtually the sole source of amateur radio information in the USA, the League could easily "condition the minds" (i.e., brainwash) of amateurs and would-be amateurs.

It's not an evil or even unethical act by the League. It is more of a survival syndrome of that membership organization, becoming the Top by making members feel good to join. Hams could read of OTHERS' accomplishments and feel good about themselves even if they've never been able to do such things.
The better they feel, the more likely they will join and/or buy the products that causes the profit that enables the League to do all those "services" for hams.

>In all your rants I see no real reasons for maintaining the CW >requirement. In fact, when you are hard pressed and under attack, you

I don't see any overt "core" there. Blowcode castigates the no-coders just on general bigot principles. He IS a bigot in my book. A crude, obnoxious, only-I-know-what-is-right bigot. Morse merde.

You mean you LACK the SKILL of understanding who wrote what? You have all the header information blocked off so that you cannot read it? Tsk, tsk.

Let's see...my object has ALWAYS been to eliminate the code test from US amateur radio license examinations.
[it is obsolete, outdated, and serves no purpose other than being emotional sustenance of some tired, old hammies whose 'home is the HF hambands] I got started in radio communications 53 years ago operating and maintaining MULTIPLE HF transmitters running 24/7. It was inspiring enough for me to change my working career future from industrial art to electronics engineering.

You mean to tell us (with your straightest face and lips pursed in a stereotypical superior sneer) that YOU CANNOT TELL WHO I AM?!? :-)

Tsk, I would say you are an epitome of braindeadness
to think I am "anonymous."

>Here's one example:

Oh, oh, heah come de judge, heah come de judge!

>Back in September of 2000, you posted here as "Avery Fine"
>(averyfine@aol.com).

SIX YEARS AGO! :-) Oh, my, is there no "statute of limitations" on this horrible "crime" of once using a different screen name? You must think so... :-)

"AveryFine" (no space) was the best I could do with an old BBS ID on AOL a DECADE ago. That old BBS ID was "Avery Fineman" used when a sysop...a harmless little play on words, a bit of humor as in "A Very Fine Man."

Apparently you do NOT want anyone else to exhibit a sense of humor in here. All must be disciplined, strict, have a Sense of Purpose (to idolize morse code use), and be strictly by the (ARRL) "book."

>In that same month, you were also using the screen name "Len Of 21"
>(lenof21@aol.com). At least one thread contains posts from you as
>indication that both of them are you.

I'm still using the AOL screen name of "Len Of 21." I don't bother with it here. Note: I could explain where that came from and how it came to be (over a former BBS that was networked to Europe) but, since you lack the appreciation for word play and humor, it is a waste of time to explain.

My Google ID is an e-mailing alias, i.e., a FORWARDING ALIAS that is provided free of charge to IEEE members. The IEEE is a Professional Association and I am a Life Member in it.
Now, you have alluded to be an "electronics professional"
yet are NOT a member of the IEEE, nor of the ACM, nor any professional association. Further, you once "identified" yourself as a "radio manufacturer" yet aren't listed anywhere as an "N2EY" electronics company. [making a radio out of junk salvage isn't what everyone else calls "radio manufacture"]

>But that's not all.

The "prosecuter" isn't resting... :-)

>On October 1, 2003, you denied ever posting to rrap as "Avery Fine".

Is there an AOL screen name saying "Avery Fine?" No.

You could have seen it a couple years ago as "AveryFine." Note the lack of the space. YOU HAVE SHOWN A LACK OF PROPER EVIDENCE! "If the glove don't fit you can't convict..." :-)

[too bad you can't get Johnnie Cochrane for your defense, he be rather dead]

>After all that, who are you to demand others' identity, or to >criticize their attempts to be anonymous?

Who are YOU to be such a judgemental prissy little habit-wearing nun schoolmistress, Miccolis?

Let's see about YOU. You've never served nor volunteered for any US military service nor government position, yet you claim towards expertise on both. You've never identified
WHAT kind of "professional electronics" work you do but just make some general-statement allusions that "you do it." Yet you make out like you Know It All about radio. They only thing any reader can verify is that you've been listed in amateur radio callbooks for a long time. You've never admittedly WORKED in a radio field even though you have two college degrees. But...you "KNOW" about radio...because you have stacks of ARRL magazines (seen in photos of your salvage-parts radio equipment)...probably memorized, ads included?

>And why should we believe you when you say you've never tried to be
>anonymous here?

I've never purposely tried to be anonymous in here.

Whether you "believe" that or not isn't something I can control.

What YOU try to CONTROL is anyone not loving or cherishing morse code mode radiotelegraphy. YOU try to make them out as evil immoral unethical non-radio people, put them on your Inquisatorial bonfire as if they defied the Will of God.

WHO ARE YOU TO JUDGE THE NO-CODE-TEST ADVOCATES?!? A god of radio speaking from some amateur Olympus (located in a small town in CT)?

>Neither Brian Burke's name nor callsign appears anywhere in his >postings as "hot-ham-and-cheese".

Then how do you KNOW "hot-ham-and-cheese's" name is Brian Burke?

[remember, "ya can't convict if it don't fit..."]

>"Leo", who described himself as a >radio amateur in Canada, would not give his callsign nor full name.

If you like going back years in Google searching, you will find that I did NOT treat "Leo" (of Canada) kindly in my first reply to him. Truth. We had a back-and-forth in public here and I apologized for that. Leo is not a fan of morsemanship either...therefore he must be on your shitlist.

>In many of your postings, your name does not appear at all.

OH! THE HORROR OF IT ALL!!

Jimmie-boy, you best ID yourself some more as "James Miccolis" on each and every posting to rid YOURSELF of such moral perfidy!

>There are many other examples.

Name ALL of them...

>Yet you have no problem with those anonymous posters.

I have little "problem" with anyone seeking the elimination of the morse code test for any US amateur radio license.

I have little "problem" with the olde tyme hammes who think that the US amateur radio hobby "MUST" remain in Their personal desires...I just tell them off, pointing out that they are simply selfish, stuck-in-the-old-days meanderthals
of morse, unable to adapt to new things, unable to be flexible on regulations which affect OTHERS rather than themselves.

Now, since you have made your usual MISDIRECTION into the alleged "faults" of others, let's get down to the nitty-gritty:

DO YOU ADMIT TO (OBVIOUSLY) USING THE PEUDONYM "QUITEFINE" IN MANY POSTINGS IN HERE?

You have been "outed" as being "QUITEFINE" and shown the evidence in public. Admit your courage (for once) and confess to this horrible, evil, immoral practice act!

Or just go out and get laid. [sexual satisfaction will ease your obvious burden of trying to prove others "guilty"]

Of course, Brian. That's Miccolis' usual tactic. MISDIRECT.
Never answer an outright challenge...make the challenger appear to be immoral/unethical/evil.

Jimmie do no evil, he hear no evil (unless it is against morse).
He see evil only in the hearts of the no-code-test advocates.

This has little to do with amateur policy. However, gays seem to use every avenue to advance their "cause." I am so sick of homosexuals dominating society for acceptance to their perversions that I now do wish they would leave, too bad there are no unexplored lands left... and in my world there are no "bisexuals", you either are heterosexual or you are not.

I truly hope homosexual behavior will be found to be a treatable illness, perhaps then society will get some rest from their sexual rants. I have a fear that most gays are molested by older siblings, parents, relatives or others (some may indeed be born gay, as to view some of the masculine lesbians and dainty men I have seen and deny such would be impossible.) And that, much in the way the young of various animals species "imprint" with who their parents are on birth or hatching, I think this first sexual experience may be closely related to this phenomenon, and it may be possible to imprint with a sexual preference--but this is a private theory of mine with only guess work to back it up. However, in forming protests against NAMBLA in my area (and throwing them out of the public library where they were holding meetings!), I am acquainted with NAMBLA's favorite slogan, "Sex before eight or else it's too late." They may be telling quite more about themselves with that slogan than they care to realize.

Also, according to figures I have seen used in various rants (you would have to seek to prove or disprove these on your own--I simply note having seen them and withhold a decision until I find concrete data), the mean age of males who impregnate teenage and younger females seeking abortions through gov't. supported family planning agencies is 27-28 years old--obviously, if this is true, child molestation is occurring which is "falling though the cracks", indeed, makes you wonder if Tom Foley or like persons were not involved in setting that one up!

If homosexuals want to discuss their "orientation", "life style" or any other nonsense, I choose to opt out. They tax my patience with their intent focus on what I do view as a most disgusting perversion. However, I notice that I am one of the few who is vocal and ask them to take their sexual discussions elsewhere around those who do enjoy such things. Why they seem to have been so successful in getting others to tolerate their bad behavior is beyond my ability to reason why.

Or put simply, if you are gay shut up and carry on, I can only have a problem with you if you rub it in my face or threaten young children with inappropriate dialog and/or actions and behaviors.

Now feel free to tear this apart and rant on, my thoughts are on the table and firmly set...

That's my analogy too. I've always seen that operators and the bands are like owning a horse. You get some good operators that will do everything they can do to be good communicators that will work to improve on their knowledge, skills and are willing to help others be better operators too. Their efforts like a work horse carry ham radio to new places. (me)

But not everyone wants to be valuable to the service and a good operator. They are like turds stinking up the bands making them unpleasant and stagnant. They don't care to be skilled, or if anyone else is skilled and knows anything either. They prefer the smell of turd. They get a license and plop on the bands like a horse turd plops on the prairie.(you)

It is a 1:1 correlation.

But you people that want to rid the service of the code requirement, fail to see the value. Sure have to learn CW make take a little time, but once you learn it and you it, you'll develope a better appreciation for what it means to be a ham, and our history.

To clarify, the service won't acually die, the number of people will increase, but those operators are undesirables because they don't feel it's worthwhile to have to know or learn anything to be a radio amateur.
They won't care for good operating practices either and ham radio will start to sound like 11 meters. Good hams will leave the polution that will start to choke the bands and nowhere will you be able to find a technical discussion. As ham radio transforms into CB style communication it's a slow and painful process, but eventually, only Lids will be left in ham radio, and they'll all be happier than pigs in slop.

It's like cracking a walnut with a sledgehammer. Whether or not anyone wants to accept or agree with me, I hope we can all still have a good

How about, Requiring it in order to be able to communicate with it?
That's a good reason and you're learning a skill. Keeping people like Markie off HF doesn't sound too bad either.

The first time you hear 'AAAAAAUDIOOOOOOOOOOOO' or 'skipland skipland skipland' in the middle of 20meters, you'll get a change of heart and will want to beg forgiveness at the Church of Hiram. I heard it a couple times and it made even the hairs on the back of my neck stand up and I was already born again.

Do you ever post anything positive?

Your posts aren't worth posting to the five boards you are boring to death.

I like CW so don't throw any of your nonsense my direction.

While I'm at it, it's not very smart to post a message responding to someone without quoting them.

Hardly a "culture", Mork. CW was part and parcel (still is) of advancing a licensee (through incentive/reward for effort), onward and upward to the earned priveleges of expanded band use.

You rail, indeed moan, that you should be afforded the same priveleges as those who have earned their just rewards while your desire is to sit back and wait for the priveleges to be handed to you.

The only imagined damage that has been fomented toward you by CW advocates is that they oft call you on the carpet for expounding day after day that Ham Radio should not be "dumbed down" to meet your selfish wishes. You take umbrage that they have the "gasp!" audacity to refute your weak arguments.

Life's a bitch, ain't it, Mark? Why should anybody have to work for anything?
It's like saying they don't deserve it.

entirely a culture you prove it effort at Code does NOT guantee a person advancement I KNOW that wasted years on the mode when I could have been no I want the license requirements to reflect valid regulatory pruposes Code test does not apear to do nor can anyone explain how the FCC and the PUBLIC are benifited by retaining code testing

No relationship exuist or at least No relationship has been shown to exist between inteligence and code ability, nor has any been shown WRT making someone a better operator refute ? If you could refute them I would support continued code testing dispite it effect on me

> Life's a bitch, ain't it, Mark?

at times

there you show you are lying wether you are lying to me or yourself I can't tell

I have spent far more effort than most Code test @0wpm hams have and have nothing to show for it nor if I soehow manged to pass a seriously accomdated code (something that might just possible in my case) I still would nothing usefull for my efforts

> It's like saying they don't deserve it.

no what you are is saying that you don't know what your shoving and coming back to title

that the claim Cw is ham radio is Bullshit

it say that the first hams were NOT hams at all since they they did not use CW they used Spark

In all reality, truth be known, the "nuttiest" of posters herein is most certainly Mark himself.

Mark has ample time to post to these newsgroups...look at his timelines.
That bespeaks volumes.

Look at the posts made by others and then compare them to the posts made by Mark. Clearly Mark has far too much time to whittle away. His home life is quite obviously lacking anything of interest.

Usenet is Mark's entire life. He lives for it, breathes it, and is a sad result of same.

So sad, he is.

How about Mark and Lloyd and a few others of us set up a schedule to meet on Echolink this Saturday eve?

Mark can be the Host. The rest of us can link to Mark...

Wouldn't that be nice, Mark? You can initiate the contacts and then regale the rest of us with your alleged degrees, mislead us with your lies, and otherwise have a lot of fun! It would be just like the CB chats you are used to.

After all, Mark, even a lowly No-Code is allowed to use Echolink.

Oh, and be sure to invite Slow Code to the foray. I'm sure Slow Code will insert no small amount of good humor...

Slow Code dislikes you, Mark, as do many of the rest of us.
See you on Echolink? Saturday night? You pick the time, Mark.

We'll have a shootout at the OK Corral via the internet.

Wyatt wont't be there, nor will Virgil. Will you?

Jim Miccolis/N2EY posts anonymously, then bitches about anyone else.

That's probably why Jim has such a boner for you.

For you to describe yourself as "Avery Fineman" is tantamount to him calling himself "Quitefine," and only Jim is a fine gentleman. You are not.

I dunno. He had no problem with Robesin's "joke" about licking his excrement off another mans genitals.

The Indians use to communicate with smoke signals. Learning smoke signals should be mandatory. This would separate the men from the boys. Smoke signals are not dependent on electricity. You can use a match or rub two sticks together. This is the only reliable way of passing messages when all else fails.

Hey:

Everybody knows if you were in a plane crash and the mic for your vhf am radio broke, you could always key the transmitter and send morse to convey your SOS. So, what you propose is very logical, also have the radio operator learn smoke signals! Then, if not only the mic was busted, but also the radio itself was busted, you could build a fire, take your coat and send your SOS!

You fit in here rather well! They like that thinking! <grin>

In that case he would have to take out his pocket knife, hollow out a send "drum signals."

Of course, if he didn't have a pocket knife he would be up the river...

Hmmm. Maybe better to forget the smoke and drum signals and toss morse

At least I'm a ham. That can't be said of you.

Nope, being accused of molesting Boy Scouts did it for me.

Everything that K4YZ/KTN4GN says is suspect and needs to be scrutinized.

For example, his Civil Air Patrol FOUO letter that was published in the Nov 2006 issue of PopComm completely contradicts his QRZ.COM/K4YZ offer to confirm his CAP communications.

That is what this thread is about... if you'd care to stay on topic.

> Just look at all the hate on eleven meters.

I wouldn't know, but there's no need to look there. The hate is already on RRAP, and K4YZ fosters most of it. When this group becomes moderated, I expect K4YZ to be banned. He'll have to hang out on the Nurse or CAP yahoo groups of his own creation and moderation.

What a coincidence. K4YZ has offered to "meet" several hams at the Dayton Hamfest, and there's a lot of hamfest parking at the shopping mall.

I learned CW.....Got really good at it and wound up at almost 30 wpm......Then got bored and havent used it in ten years. I have no use for it anymore whatsoever!

I dont care if they ban it or not....I could care less. As an Extra class op with 38 years as a ham I do what I want when I want to.

Hi Alex, You sound like a brand new no-code Tech. Welcome to ham radio.

All those computers you mentioned will work fine, but if you really want to do any serious computer work you're going to want to invest in a Vic 20, or a TI-99, or a Commodore 64. Power users swear by'em.

Dear MP,

Please pull your friggen head out of your ass and use your brain for once.

Smoke signals are a line of sight form of communication and you can't see them at night unless the fire is extremely large, and smoke signals don't work well in natural disasters like huricanes and tornados. Blind people can't see them either, they can only smell the smoke.

CW works well all the time, unless you're too lazy or dumb to learn it.
In which case you'll probably want to stick to playing with your matches and smoke bombs.

You Earned that right too, when you passed the 20 wpm code test, and you should flaunt it around like I do. Here are some ideas I like:

No-code hams should have to stand up salute when you walk into a room, even ones in wheelchairs.

You get to sit in a chair at club meetings and if all the chairs are taken you can make a no-code or nickel ham sit on the floor.

First in line for the refreshments, ahead of the 13wpm hams and the nickel hams is always nice too. Don't forget your cattle prod.

73 to you my extra class friend, you earned it. Everyone else these days just wants a welfare handout license.

Yes unfortunately and an awful lot of them too.

They all hate the CW requirement and want ham radio to get dumbed down more, but if I had to single just one of them out for a good slapping, I'd probably say it's Markie that needs it the most.

Now if Markie learned cw to 13 or 20 wpm, I'd congratulate him and say, "Welcome to Ham radio Markie."

I know what you mean Dan. With the anticipation that ham radio is going to get dumbed down again real soon, the dumb-it-downers like Lenny, Markie, Opus and a few others are really trashing the groups with anti code test hate. We can only hope the code requirement is retained and increased so that they can't get on HF and mess that up too.

what irony? I am sure you never mispell anything but you understood the meaning there the objective is achived

as I manage to demostrate spelling skill is not required (although it is a conveince I grant) to comunication but it seem the ProCOde crowd are esp denedpnant on it indeed my typing here only goes to prove one of my points, that even if I somehow managed to pas a Code test I could never use the mode and yet nobody has anytrouble understanding me even on HF

Even with those the CBers won't use a crimping tool. Too expensive. They just squeeze the crap out of the ends with greasy pliers.

Sure! He did no such and came with new hair (repated) in an otter-like state of dirt, then left. He came baclkk without the new hair, for a second round wjhihc (from Old Norse, meaning "with hair on sideways") and the writer found that odd.

If you want to go slightly higher tech you could use a Heliograph. Of

These CW vs The World arguments are amusing, kind of like old programmers claimimg BASIC is the only way to go, or old database guys who would claim that flatfile databases are better than SQL.

Give Morkie a few minutes. He lives for Usenet and will, within mere seconds, drop a Mark Morgan Loaf of fertilizer on all messages.

kookathon on clockwork

Ironic, is it not? A man who spends most of his waking hours and spewing hundreds of posts weekly on Usenet declares others to be "kooks"?

There is something very wrong with him.

Allow me to try to properly spell your own words, Mork. Like a moth to a flame. You simply cannot resist, can you? You are predisposed to, as Slow Code says, "dump" on each and every post made herein. You just cannot help yourself. You obviously have far too much time on our idle hands.
Apparently my previous post hit Baby Mark on the soft spot on his jumbled head. Your rejoinder was almost decipherable...almost.

And again, as in posts previous, you challenge me to give my callsign as "proof" of my existance. For what? Your third grade bent on Machismo? That is lame, Mark, even for you.

I'll give you my callsign, Mark. Meet me on 17M sometime...legally. I'll give my call every ten minutes as required. In fact, Mark, I am not all that far from you, so chatting on 17M even when the band is down should be easy to do. We can chat there...

Oh, and if r.r.a.p. has turned into a cesspool, look no further than your own mirror. You are part and parcel of the ruination of this group. In fact, Mark, you are the MAJOR reason this group has so sadly deteriorated.

Alexander Graham Bell.
CW tested and FCC approved.
callsign to be divulged on 17 meters....

nor can he spell his insults correctly if he is going to attack my spellinghis should be beyond repaorch

hey rayburn, anonymous is right. the amounts they sell are far smaller than doses used by hospitals to do a bone scan (I know, I had one done some 13 years ago to track down a problem) and I am still very much alive (go figure, eh?).

perhaps you need to do a little more research before spouting off that its "bullshit"?

Try as I may, I cannot for the life of me figure out what, "oterment of ffilth" means.
Should I regress to Stonehenge days? Obtain the services of the few who can cipher these oddities written by strange hands?

My dog makes more sense in that at least I can understand her nervous requests to go outside...

I learned to read Mark's stuff by holding the original Old English version of Beowulf up to a mirror.

In a lot of areas - the FIRE DEPTS. don't approve of OPEN BURNINGS - so I guess that means that you would have to get the local fire depts. blessing prior to your disaster to use smoke!

Reference to the subject - if one did not want to use pure CW (if there is a mental or physical block from learning it) - there are other digital signals that could be used, i.e.:PSK31, etc.

Other line of site communications could be - focused white light beams, Lasers, flags, etc.

I think the real issue is that you and some of your friends are just plain against CW, (and you want to turn everybody else in that same direction), you don't use it, you don't want to learn it, etc. If that is the case, then why don't you just drop it - QUIT NAGGING LIKE AN OLD LADY - and go onto some other subject or project?

Don't sweat it.

There are plenty of folks who studied the code tapes and got to 20WPM, to never use it on the air.

Dave would severely injure himself if he heard you on HF.

No luck involved. If you'd actually read his post, he identified himself. I merely pointed out that there is no amateur Bill Newport listed in 4-land, but there were several Newports in the database for Canton, Ohio; K4YZ's old stomping grounds. I'm sure that it's all a coincidence.

I learned it. I passed it. I see it as irrelevant government hurdle to be passed. It serves no regulatory purpose in the ARS. No other mode has a stand alone exam that denies access to HF.

Fantastic organization. Lots of activities. I'd recommend

Yes, forgot about the SDK-85. Used that in tech school way back in 1981. That was a smoking little bare-bones computer system...

Len is trying to make amateur radio a better place. Haven't you read his comments to the FCC?

By your own definition, you are a bad ham, Dan.

> SC

A few regulars have passed away, others have been run off or shot themselves in the foot.

Larry Roll did it to himself as an HR student posting racist comments.

Steve ran "Cutie Boy" off.

Mike Deignan wanted to tell everyone how it was, but neglected to curtail his own greed in the callsign collection business.

His Coast Guard partner snagged a Guam call, having never been to Guam.

W3RV self-confessed a his entry to amateur radio was via the NO-TICKET route.

Coslo went on to create a BBS so that he could exclude Len from commenting. So far no word of his BBS, and the hate Len crowd has reappeared on RRAP. The BBS thing, if actually created, was probably a flop.

Kim left when Bruce wouldn't stop the sexual inuendo.

Heil overcame his embarassment of working out-of-band Frenchmen on 6 meters, and is now one of your "not so good hams" but he's still got his A-1 Operators certificate. He's even contemplating running for the Roanoke Division. That election just closed out, and he didn't get elected.

Then there is Robesin. He'll keep posting his sickness until it costs him a career or some jail time. He can't help himself. He also posts as Mark and others.

John, you are forgetting basic theory:

All electronics works by means of smoke.

If the smoke leaks out, it won't work!

words via ham repeater from his "track." :-)

All I'm doing is expressing a desire to END the code test for any US amateur radio license. I couldn't possibly end the mythical megal mood of fantasy-wanting hams dreaming of Saving the World via CW.

Don't forget his continued claim of "getting any [personnel] job he get any new job other than bus driver...

Now now, Brian, Jeffie is a Chiefie Petty Officer and a LECTURER at a university! [OK, an instructor at a junior college...]

I still like the part where he left his "hormonally-charged" prom date on the porch while he fled home to use his newly-acquired ham license! :-)

It wasn't a "BBS" but just a Blog thing, a forum for commenting.
It didn't get far off the ground and is presently just wasting ISP space.

It's all a part of his heroic "hostile actions" lifestyle. Enough hot air and personal insults to reach the "edge of space" far beyond what the Coslonaut was able to do... :-)

Now we have Blowcode...who resembles Deignan somewhat, as if he is trying a new writing style and multi-posting the same diatribe everywhere like a good "RF Commando"...the same old, cliche'-ridden shit seen for decades out of New England.

All those Coders seem to inhabit some kind of fantasyland.

Those comments don't make me think that Len is trying to "make amateur radio a better place".

How would banning anyone under the age of 14 years from having an amateur radio license "make amateur radio a better place"?

> All I'm doing is expressing a desire to END the code test for any US > amateur radio license.

No, :Len, that's not all you're doing on rrap.

Tell us how amateur radio is being ruined by hams 13 years of age and under, Len.

Tell us why it's OK for you, a non-amateur, to try to change the regulations, but not OK for someone from outside your neighborhood to try to change the zoning ordinances.

OTOH, Len may be helping amateur radio in two ways:

1) By staying out of it - his license is still in the box.

2) By spamming the FCC with so many hundreds of wordy pages of comments, reply comments, and general diatribe, he may have actually delayed the process of eliminating Element 1.

If you think Nessie is Britain's best known Scot then I'll have some of what you are drinking GOOD news for the Loch Ness monster which has just been voted the best known Scot in Britain despite the fact that a) she is a monster of uncertain nationality, and b) she does not exist. Minor quibbles, I think you will agree.

So how come Nessie topped this prestigious poll? Some clue may come from the fact the survey was conducted by the maker of Crabbies Green Ginger Wine, a potent brew favoured by those unruly types within our society who like to get off their heads quickly on cheap sweet booze, or pensioners, as I like to call them.

One can only assume that many of the respondents had partaken of the drink before questioning. I don't know if you have ever tried drinking a couple of bottles of Crabbies on the bounce but, let me tell you, if you do, the appearance of monsters in the room, while very likely to occur, is the least of your worries.

As usual the survey's conclusions have been dismissed, largely on the grounds that they are the opinions of the general public.

One critic even derided the poll as another example of our preference for vacuous celebrity over men or women of real achievement. How Nessie, who has never been spotted at all, never mind spotted emerging from a nightclub while flashing her nether regions, can be regarded as a witless celebrity is beyond me. There again I do not believe in Britney Spears either.

at this point, it really doesn't matter. you have reverted to hyperbole and insults just to try and make a point.
Polonium 210 is used often in medical scans (perhaps not as a bone scan, but there are others) and the amount fed to that old spy was far in excess of any medical dosage (which was so far in excess of the amounts they sell on that website).

so. calling me a shithead only serves you in this fashion, eh?

insults, like violence, are often the last refuge of the incompetent.

What a dumb quote - is it genuine or did you make it up? Anyway, I guess the vagina is so etched onto the minds of male heterosexuals that even mental illness does not prevent them from focusing on it. And I guess the penis is so etched onto the minds of female heterosexuals that even mental illness does not prevent them from focusing on it.

class contains:

As of May 14, 2000:

Novice - 49,329 (7.3%)
Technician - 205,394 (30.4%)
Technician Plus - 128,860 (19.1%)
General - 112,677 (16.7%)
Advanced - 99,782 (14.8%)
Extra - 78,750 (11.7%)

Total Tech/TechPlus - 334,254 (49.5%)

Total General/Advanced/Extra - 291,209 (43.2%)

Total all classes - 674,792

As of December 2, 2006:

Novice - 23,801 (3.6%) [decrease of 25,528]
Technician - 288,922 (44.0%) [increase of 83,528]
Technician Plus - 33,644 (5.1%) [decrease of 95,216]
General - 131,409 (20.0%) [increase of 18,732]
Advanced - 70,183 (10.7%) [decrease of 29,599]
Extra - 108,154 (16.5%) [increase of 29,404]

(percentages may not add up to exactly 100.0% due to rounding)

Total Tech/TechPlus - 322,566 (49.2%) [decrease of 11,688]

Total General/Advanced/Extra - 309,746 (47.2%) [increase of 18,537]

Total all classes - 656,113 (decrease of 18,679)

Note that these totals do not include licenses that have expired but are in the grace period.

They also do not include club, military or other station-only licenses.

Note also that effective April 15, 2000, new Novice, Technician Plus and Advanced licenses are no longer issued.

Since April 15, 2000, FCC has renewed all existing Technician Plus licenses as Technician. By May of 2010, the number of Technician Plus licenses will drop to zero, because all of them will have been renewed as Technician or allowed to expire. It is therefore informative to consider the totals of the two classes, since the Technician class includes a significant number of Technician Plus licenses renewed as Technician.

I too about 20 years ago was friends with a wrestler whose stage\wrestling persona was quite bizarre, with him being some sort of half-human-half-beast character with his wife as his "trainer" complete with safari outfit & whip. One of his trademarks was smashing folding chairs over his own head. However, outside the ring he was quite articulate, intelligent, outgoing & friendly. It was quite amusing to see him perform on TV and know his true persona was quite different.

You are the one who admitted having sex with a 17 year old boy, Marqueer. And from the extra numbers of typos in your reply, you appear to have been upset at the truth.

Hi SC,

Yup, I got my tech ticket a few months ago, and I'm now working on learning code and studying for the general ticket. I hope maybe January or February, but not until I can get my ham nook setup in the garage plus move my radio from the car to the garage so I can actually focus on the radio :) It's hard learning how to ragchew while on the interstate. hehe

I do have a C64 on the way, and that plus what I have now should be enough to get me going. Too much fun!

Take care,

Alex

Yes, Mark, it is something to be "aspried" to. It is recognition by two separate individuals who are already members. It isn't something you can apply or ask for. You should look up the things which are required in order to be nominated. During the more than twenty five years I've been a member, I've nominated quite a number of other ops for membership. If you look at the League's web page, you can find a list of operators who have received one nomination and are awaiting a second.
The idea for such a list was mine.

> Welp, the ARRL issued him a certificate anyway.

The only way to receive an A-1 Operators Club certficate is to be nominated by two who are already members. If two nominations are received, a certificate is issued.

What is truly pathetic is how you and the twit will stoop to anything to take a swipe at anyone. Tell me, Brian, do you think Mark will be nominated by two members of the A-1 Operators Club for either his sparkling phone, digital mode or Morse operation?

No, Len, that isn't all you're doing. You've expressed your thoughts in

It might make amateur radio a better place for Len...if he ever passed a licensing exam and became a participant. Ain't happenin'.

Keep looking, Junior. Until last month, I'd not participated in a CW Sweepstakes contest since before you ever obtained an amateur license.
I worked no W8DUA this year. Keep "tlaking another f my fired" until you begin firing on all cylinders.

That isn't it. His problem is that he used a mode "uncomitied to no code of several club hams" or something like that. Lately he has been busy being repated. I'd love to have heard Mark's CW operation during a Sweepstakes 'test. I'll bet is sounded like someone falling down a flight of stairs with a keyer and a Scrabble game.

The "guy" doesn't broadcast that he is an ARRL A-1 Operator, work out of band Frenchmen on 6 Meters, makes claims that a typo makes someone ineligible for a leadership role, then makes a typo himself and offers to run for the ARRL Roanoke Division Director!!!

So many screw-ups, so little time...

Heil alone holds that distinction.

I think it depends how one defines "better". From what I have read these many years, it seems that Len would consider amateur radio to be "better" if it were more like cb.

In a month and a half, it will be seven years since Len's "going for Extra right out of the box" post....

It's particularly noteable that the amateurs most cited for seriously violations are much closer to Len's age than to 14 years. For example, Jack Gerritsen, ex-KG6IRO, who used to live pretty close to Len's house, is over 70. I don't know if his prison sentence has started yet.

Len was all concerned about the dangers of young people being licensed, but the real threat is at the other end of the life span....

The fact is that many of your posts do not contain your name or other indication that you wrote them.

In the case of the "Avery Fine" posts, you went on to deny that you wrote them.

Sure looks like an attempted deception.

That's not the point, Len. The point is that you've not always identified yourself in your postings here. In fact, you've denied posting here as "AveryFine@aol.com" and then were shown to be mistaken.

So what? You've told us that same tired old story many times.
It does not make your opinion more valid than mine.

Not the point, Len.

Except it's not funny.

Just the opposite! I enjoy a good joke.

But you're not funny.

Neither are you "a very fine man", Len. Not when you behave as you do here.

Not the point. You keep trying to misdirect, but it doesn't work.

So what? That doesn't make your opinion on amateur radio policy more valid than mine.

N2EY is my amateur radio callsign, Len. Not the name of my radio manufacturing enterprise.

I don't "make a radio out of junk salvage", Len.

More misdirection from Len.

The fact is that you wrote those 10 posts and then denied that you wrote them.
You weren't very happy when your mistake/deception was uncovered.

That's the plain truth of it - you wrote some posts here under the screen name "averyfine@aol.com" and then denied ever using that screen name to post here.

So why should you be trusted or believed now,if you say you are not
"Slow Code"?

> >After all that, who are you to demand others' identity, or to

I'm not what you describe at all. If anything, you've described your behavior, Len. All the insulting nicknames, threats of violence, SHOUTING, lecturing, and much more.
> Let's see about YOU. You've never served nor volunteered > you claim towards expertise on both.

Nope. You're mistaken again. I don't claim to be an expert on anything, Len.

But I do occasionally know more than you about something, like when the Soviet bomber known as the "Bear" was deployed. Or how far it is from the USSR to Japan.

> You've never identified
> WHAT kind of "professional electronics" work you do but just > make some general-statement allusions that "you do it."

Why is that important? I've seen how you behave towards people with more military service than you, more education, etc. Those things make no difference in your behavior except that you use the information to insult the person.

Someone could have 20 years military service, multiple patents, a Ph.D. in EE and be the chief engineer of a major radio manufacturing company. Yet if that person were a procodetest advocate, and showed up here on rrap, it's a very safe bet you'd make fun of and insult him or her.

Because that's what you do, Len. You even admit it, further on down this post:

Your own words:

"I just tell them off, pointing out that they are simply selfish, stuck-in-the-old-days meanderthals
of morse, unable to adapt to new things, unable to be
themselves."

> Yet
> you make out like you Know It All about radio.

Nope. I just know more than you about some things. That really seems to bother you, Len - so much that you are compelled to attack me personally.

> They only

There's a lot more that can be verified if you're willing to look. You aren't willing.

I've not spoken of my work here. Nor do I intend to.

Those are but a small part of my library, Len.

Why should we believe that? Because you say so? You said you never used the screen name "averyfine@aol.com" here, but that's not true.

> Whether you "believe" that or not isn't something I can

I asked why I should believe you. You can't seem to come up with a reason.

> What YOU try to CONTROL is anyone not loving or cherishing

Nope. All I do is point out inconsistencies in others' posted statements. Your statements are so full of inconsistencies that it's hard to keep up with them!

> WHO ARE YOU TO JUDGE THE NO-CODE-TEST ADVOCATES?!?

A qualified radio amateur. Which you are not.

Who are you to judge anyone, Len?

He's admitted it many times.

You sound proud of the fact that you acted like a jackass to a total stranger.

> We had a back-and-forth in > public here and I apologized for that.

Really? I don't think so. Show me.

> Leo is not a fan of > morsemanship either...

That must be why you were nice to him - after that fact came out.

The point is simple: It was OK with you if "Leo" posted anonymously, because he was not in favor of the Morse code test. But it is not OK with you for those who were in favor of the Morse Code test to post anonymously.

That's a textbook example of a double standard on your part, Len.

> therefore he must be on your shitlist.

I don't have such a list, Len. It's clear you project your own thinking on others.

"Leo" and I had many respectful, civil, substantive exchanges here. The same is true of myself and K2UNK (a director of NCI, no less!), K0HB, and even WK3C (who used to be WA6VSE, but who got his Extra and a vanity call, and now is busy working DX on HF and fighting the BPL threat). Plus several others.

No. You're not in charge here.

You mean like folks who don't want their neighborhoods rezoned? Folks who cannot accept change in real estate, and must keep everything the way it was when they moved in?

Perhaps, when someone objects to having their neighborhood rezoned, the zoning folks should "just tell them off, pointing out that they are simply selfish, stuck-in-the-old-days meanderthals....unable to adapt to new things, unable to be flexible on regulations which affect OTHERS rather than themselves."

See how that works?

Why? Does that behaving like a jackass - telling people off - make you feel good, Len?

Because that's how you come off.

What's a "PEUDONYM"?

I'm certain I don't have any.

And why are you shouting, Len? That just makes you look immature.

By the way, "Leo" advised me that I should just ignore you. That you weren't worth my time.

I think he's right.

In Straight Man In A Gay World - the fourth film in the series - a self-confessed homophobe moves to San Francisco's notoriously gay Castro
District. Ryan Hickmott, 24, is a God-fearing, conservative former youth minister and member of the military from rural Michigan. Ryan's values as an American are firmly rooted in three essential beliefs: God, country, and family. Today, Ryan believes these principles are under attack and homosexuality is partially to blame. The Bible condemns it, the military is disrupted by it, and even the definition of family is being threatened by the prospect of gay marriage. In an effort to gain some perspective on his own firmly rooted beliefs, Ryan will spend 30 days living with a gay roommate named Ed Coller in San Francisco - a city whose pulse beats to the rhythm of its thriving gay community.
http://www.channel4sales.com/programming-and-schedules/more4-schedule...

for 30 days...
"It's just my view to say that a murder's wrong... homosexuality is wrong", says Ryan, the homophobe who has travelled from red state America to the notoriously gay Castro district in San Francisco.

As Ryan joins a gay sports team, works a job that caters to gay clientele, attends gay-friendly church services and lives with his gay roommate, Ed, he gets an inside view of what it is like to live as a minority that still elicits strong feelings of hatred among many Americans.
Throughout the 30 Days the former youth minister and member of the military will have his Bible-rooted values severely challenged as these important issues become very personal.

I think last week was an American redneck christian living as a Muslim.

I think it would have been much more revealing if they'd taken an educated liberal atheist woman and got her to live as a Muslim.

If you cared about whether what you were saying is true or not, if you

I trained in freestyle wrestling for a number of years, and one club had some local professionals start training. Gilles "The Fish" Poisson showed up at one of our local tournaments and seemed to be well respected by our coach. Another one Yvon Robert Junior was openly laughed at because of how bad he was when he trained at the club. Basically, a much smaller and long-retired assistant coach used to throw him around at will. But he still managed to have an eight year career as the son of a local legend Yvon Robert Senior.

Gilles Poisson had a neat gimmick for the time. He really was a big trong guy and would be thumping his opponent. But the crowd would start chatting "Poiiiiiiissssoooonnnnn" and he would stop wrestling and beg the crowd to stop taunting him. He was in the WWWF at one time and was managed by Freddie Blassie.

Is it true that the FCC can obtain radio fixes on the exact geographical location of illegal and clandestine radio stations?

[1] TRUE
[2] FALSE

Answer 1 is Correct!

Modern technology grants the Federal Communications Commission the electronic know-how to pin-point through high-tech equipment the location of any operational radio transmitter

Not according to gay men I have worked with over the years.

They go to great lengths (pardon the pun) to facilitate less painful anal intercourse. One fellow said he'd perfer that to oral gratification any time.

He's dead now.

It absolutely >>>IS<<< "within (your) power to do so", Morkie.

Not a single person that I know of, and certainly not me, forces you to type what you type.

If YOU weren't providing such a plethora of stupid, whining, inaccurate and mistruthful posts to make fun of and humiliate you with,
I'd have nothing to do with my late nite time...Maybe go back to

There's nothing "fraudulent" about calling a dork or a putz a dork or putz.

I address you by name, Mork.

Just like YOU "address" me by "stev", "stve", "stave", "stebie",
"steb", etc etc etc.

And as soon as you quit acting like a comical misguided alien, then I'll quit calling you "Mork" rather than "Mark"

And here's a quote for you that shows who the vandal REALLY is:

EXACT QUOTE:

Morkie, I will conceed that you know two things that I will never know...What it's like to lick my excrement off of another man's

UNQUOTE

No matter what the topic, I can always count on you to eventually provide me with the evidence of your lying and misquoting, Morkie. You just can't help yourself. You THINK that you're justifying your tirades and lies, but all you do is walk on your own toes.

Nope.

Meaning you STILL are trying to misquote and misrepresent what I

I said YOU know two things I DO NOT. It's right there. YOU even quoted it.

You'd better go back and read some of the FCC letters issued lately, Morkie. Almost all of them for Technicians operating on HF illegally or Nickle Generals operating in Extra and Advanced sub bands.

Guess what...?!?!

You're "bearly" on Amateur Radio, Morkie!

I've got N2EY, K0HB and K8MN in the log.

However NONE of your cronies show up there...Funny how you claim everyone who IS active on the air are "bad ops" yet none of your buddies can even get an honorable mention in a contest log or casual QSO. The only one of the feeble five we've heard on HF is Toiddie and his illegal broadcast operation.

No...what Toiddie was promoting was cartoonized kiddie porn.

Maybe his jailmates will differntiate between his set and subset.

There are no lies here generated by me, fatboy.

That you don't like what I have to say or how I say it is irrelevent. That doesn't make it untruthful.

You HAVE been misquoting me, Morkie.

You chose to try and take the middle of a sentence and use that as the whole context.

It was a lie. You got caught in your own lie over and over.....

YOU have proven it over and over again for the last few days by repeatedly re-posting it.

Thanks.

> a Man attack has the right of self dense, the right and moral duty

Well Morkie, I doubt that there's anyone here that doesn't think you're dense, least of all me.

You're the one who "agreed" that I am responsible for less than 30% of what lands here, Morkie.

YOU agreed with me in another thread that YOU are responsible for over 60% of what hits RRAP.

And Morkie...

WHAT is "inconvemtaenced"...?!?!?

US armed WHAT...?!?!

The FACTS are that you are NOT a Veteran of the US Armed Forces,
Morkie.

That's not what I said, Morkie.

Why are you having such a hard time with such a simple sentence?

> (UNSNIP)...I have not done...(SNIP)

You have not done WHAT?

> (UNSNIP)...I have met Robeson...(SNIP)

No, you haven't.

I'd know because I'd have to soak in a barrel full of "Dawn" to help get the grease off of me afterwards and I haven't had to do that.

> (UNSNIP)...as can be evedenced by the facts both of us are still alve if I had met

Yet another thinly veiled death threat from YOU again, I see, Morkie.

> (UNSNIP)...Robeson who never also has utterred 2 death threats...(SNIP)

For once you're right...I never uttered any death threats.

Maybe you're finally waking up.

> or flase praticingof Medicne bothare crimes with robeson you just can't tell

What's "Medicne", Morkie?

I don't practice MEDICINE, Morkie...I practice NURSING.

You see, Morkie...THAT is why almost everyone here except the badly..

Everything is "lier" with you.

I am only using a portable antenna support of my own design in the back yard, and I both hear and work LOT'S of stations from 80 meter CW through 17 meter SSB.

Here's what's going to happen after the Morse Code exam is dropped:

There will be a brief surge of NCT's who upgrade to an HF license.
There will be a brief (maybe 6 months?) burst of new ops on HF, then it will be back to the repeaters.

There will be a brief surge of new Amateurs. Ditto the above, minus the migration back to the repeaters.

Then it will be business as usual...Just as it has been for the last 5 major changes of Amateur Radio regulations that were supposed to bring magnificent numbers of new operators to the fold.

The idea was rhetorical, Mork. You're too incompetent to initiate an Echolink QSO.

First of all, Mork, You've never heard me on the air.

Secondly, if you're not hearing any "abuses" on 11 meters, it only means that you were too incompetent to screw the antenna on.

"Erp" is a burp of small volume, Morkie.

The "Earp's" were the family of western fame.

An "The Clanton's" were not the only people there that day, Mr
Three College Degrees.

I guess that presumes to prove that Morkie's the schizo I claim him

It's true. Of course they have to be able to hear the transmitter from more than one location to triangulate a location, but with both 14 fixed and an unknown number mobile assets finding something in the US is not a difficult task once they start looking.

Of course any clandestine (i.e. illegal) transmitter will have to somehow catch the attention of the FCC, either by the FCC monitoring stations stumbling onto it or somebody bringing it to their attention. Of course, the transmitter will need to be active for some period of time to allow them to pinpoint the exact location.

So, if someone insists on being a pirate radio operator, they are gambling that they won't get caught... Just like the nuts who think the posted speed limits are only suggestions and that the lack of Highway Patrol Officers means anything goes, sometimes get caught.

I for one don't want to loose my ticket. Despite what SC says, I worked for that Extra...

no steve I lack the base to deveolope the skill it is just that simple many people find diffcult I find if not impossible to require far than 5 year 40min per day 7 day week I had that kind of time in my youth

If the etes were run then as now I have made after about 4 years of that

but still Morse Code is not the be all and end all of ham radio is just isn't that important and the FCC would seem to agree

Did you mean to write:

'There was a time when astronauts were skilled and knew Morse Code.' ?

If so, let's add some other fun facts:

None of the Mercury, Gemini or Apollo astronauts was a ham. If they knew Morse Code, it was because of their pre-NASA military training as pilots.

We've had noncodetested Technicians as astroanuts since 1991 - almost 16 years ago. What's the problem? Are you just now beginning to figure this out?

None of the spacecraft communications systems use Morse Code or HF. They're all above 30 MHz.

As for being skilled - let's just say that all the astronauts have quite an impressive skill set.

Could you do what they do? I think not.

and when the people saw the queen/king of knob jobs known as Lloydie there was great ridicule and laughter, and the land was blanketed by a smoky haze as the men lit 10,000 fires and cooked man-meat so that there could be a barbecue feast for the fatassed pizza boy, since cocks is what the fatassed pizza boy usually dined on and the women were all hoping that the king of knob jobs in Alabama would chose to do 'The Stroke' with his tiny clit instead of boring them with his talk of timelords, star trek and daleks. And many of the women swooned over the stench of the shit and piss smell of the king of knob jobs in alabama, and some others of course grew nauseous in their stomach regions from just looking at the genetic defect.

And nobody was jealous of the fatassed pizza boy from colder climes and read of his stupidity from the land of nod and Alabama who was frustrated, and it provoked more anger and envy from the king, and he pounded his cheap assed big lots desk, and some pounded their desk and threw large objects and his filthy HUD apartment carpeting was given more semen stains. The fatassed king of knob jobs in Alabama had to drain his meager bank account. And he feared that he would be banned from the INTERNET because of his stupidity.

and meanwhile in the land of nod and Alabama the men cooked man-meat on fires and drank beer and sucked cock with the king and the king did the Electric Slide on Rev. Al Sharpton's long dong.

and for the king of knob jobs in Alabama it was all good.....

I already said what was going to happen; it will be almost enough to entice someone into the service. Of course, you wouldn't believe me.

'Cept for one thing... The FCC will have removed a unnecessary and superfluous licencing requirement. Besides, who would want to jump into a cesspool of people talking about licking excrement from other's genitals anyway??? Thanks for your efforts to improve the service.

What? No prediction hordes of unwashed heathens destroying amateur radio as pro-coders have claimed in the last 5 major changes in Amateur Radio regulations???

FYI, I'm afraid they've already come into the service - as code tested hams. You're one of them. Congratulations.

I can only hope that in your fight to reduce other peoples enjoyment of the ARS, that you've reduced your own. You've certainly reduced your status in the human race.

Dave, stooping isn't required where you're concerned, and there's no shortage of criticisms coming from your direction. Besides, why do you want people to go through your frat-boy hazing?

Getting wallpaper isn't high on my list of priorities. Mark will have to answer for himself.

BTW, who were the two hams that screwed up and sponsored you? How many on the present list did you nominate and are trying to get over the hump by having a their names published? Do you think that having their names published will make it easier for them to get in? Hell, save the ARRL a lot of trouble and have one of your Cronies get on one weekend and work a "list" that you provide.

Finally, have you layed out a plan to oust the incumbent ARRL Roanoke Division Director? Here's a hint, you might want to get active in your section first. Let them see who you are, find out what you're like. Best of Luck.

like I said it may well most likely for digital stuff or the facts most hams that know do find my techical skill worth having around only on USENET where the stubleer from speech are jamed for my use by the mediuam and my dyslexia (and the need to defend myself froma Pair

I'm not sure that Dave ever graduated from college, so code-hazing may be as close as he got to the experience. He didn't even go through the service school for radio ops, probably "bypassed" college the same way
- too smart for it. And you wonder about the attitude?

Hmmmm? Having to defend yourself from a pair of A1A Ops just doesn't sound right. Either on the air or otherwise.

Maybe a DXpedition will get him back in the picture, but he'll have to pay for this one himself.

Funny and common sense at the same time! How about that.

Why?

If someone is worried about microphone failure at a critical time, it makes sense to have a spare microphone available.

> LOL

Yup. Sometimes common sense is so obvious that it's almost funny.

Now, what would you do if the rig broke down in an emergency? That's probably more likely than a microphone failure. Can you fix any failure in the rigs you use?

Nope.

Just correctly addressing the dork.

Waddayamean I "do't try to make a papoint anymore"...?!?!

I've MADE a point, Morkie.

First of all is that there is nothing really worth doing here since you have chosen to slop the hogs all over RRAP. I've been engaging in REAL debate and "policy discussion" in the pages of real media sources.

Nothing's ever "gotten done" here anyway except to bring up a topic only to see it made yet another "no code" debate, regardless of the original theme. We have you and Lennie the Lame to blame for that.

Secondly is that I consider you an unwashed, undisciplined, lying, deceitful, pathetic boor of a person, worthy of nothing more than my laughter...And you generate PLENTY of that ! ! ! ! ! !

> and if you insit on fraudletly altering the atributioan this is all

Once you quit being a dork and a putz, I'll quit calling you a dork and a putz.

So far, it seems like that's not about to happen.

The "disruptive vandalism" is no more than making fun of your stupidity, Mork.

Unfortunately for all of us, you provide a great many opportunities to excel at making fun of you.

And the episodes of "leaving" for " a bout a week" is due to having real employment, Morkie. I know that's a hard concept for you, having been on welfare most of your adult life, but hey, SOMEONE has to

No.

You lack the nads to do it.

You claim you're disabled.

I claim you're a liar based upon your other claims in 1000's of other posts made by you that undermine your own claim of disability.

Not so far...Despite insisting that they'd dispense with the code issue when the treaty was dealt with they'd get rid of code testing.

The treaty's been modified for two YEARS now and the code test is still here.

And you're still not allowed on Amateur HF.

Two good things to contemplate today.

You haven't made a point in years, Morkie.

Your only two forays into "legitimate" radio topics were your subsequently dismissed as lie tales about "moonbunce" and your "question" about modes on 60 meters.

Your typical response was to harranggue Hans over his response to you, which was technically and literally correct.

Funny, too, that you subsequentl;y claim to "know more about radio than most extras" yet don't have a clue as to what emission designators are or how to read them.

I get nothing but entertainment from you anyway, Morkie.

You ahve nothing to offer here but self-humiliation, and plenty of that, it seems.

Morkie, those "investgations" occured due to some reason OTHER than me filing a complaint, and they started WAAAAAAAAAAAY before I even knew you existed.

I FOUND THE EVIDENCE OF YOU BEING INVESTIGATED AND THREW IT OUT FOR

You couldn't resist! HOOK LINE AND SINKER!

Just like "Slow Code" said...YOU CAN'T HELP YOURSELF!

Your own propensity to let your ego overrun your common sense

You keep doing it to yourself...over and over and over and

That's right, Brian. The ARRL issues the certificate and maintains records. No one has any veto capability.

No, I don't have to wonder. I'll leave the wondering up to you.
Two members nominate. The ARRL issues.

Yes, Brian, you stupes do stoop. You've had a chip on your shoulder for ages.

I'm not in a fraternity and I don't engage in any hazing. Let's summarize: No fraternity. No hazing. Not mine.

You could sit around for decades without ever achieving A-1 Op status.
It doesn't matter whether it is on your list of priorities or not.
You can't apply for it. You can't obtain it by working a certain number of states or countries. The only way to achieve it is to have two members nominate you. They apply the criteria set out for membership.

> Mark will have > to answer for himself.

That might prove interesting in and of itself.

> BTW, who were the two hams that screwed up and sponsored you?

[Brian stoops to take a swipe]

I don't know who nominated me, Brian. There are two lists published on the League's web site. One is of A-1 Op members. The other is of those who have one nomination.

A single nomination could be a screw up, but different nominations?

> How many > on the present list did you nominate and are trying to get over the > hump by having a their names published?

I don't know, Brian--a number of them. Any who I nominated were worked by me on the air one or more times. If I submitted their names and callsigns to the ARRL as A-1 Operators Club nominees, I thought their operating met the criteria for membership.

> Do you think that having their > names published will make it easier for them to get in?

Having their calls, not names, published might just do that. It might just jog the memories of members perusing the list.

> Hell, save the > ARRL a lot of trouble and have one of your Cronies get on one weekend

That wouldn't be something in accordance with the established criteria for membership, Brian.

"Laid", Brian. No, I've told you that I have no immediate plans to run for League office.

Here's a hint: You aren't in my Section and you have no idea of how active I am in it.

Quite many of them already know me.

Sorry, Morkie.

You continue to try and "quote" from the middle of a sentence and pass it off as something else.

You CONTINUE to prove that you're incompetent in English

All those DX callsigns and Brain never got nominated...Guess that Brain doesn't understand the workings of the ARRL.

But then he's also showed us he doesn't understand the workings of much at all.

Of course not.

That "paperwork", including valid authorizations to operate, documentation of contacts, etc etc, might actually substantiate your claims.

As it is now, you simply blow us off with your "it's in the garage" excuse.

The truth is that it doesn't exist....Oh, I have no doubt you were in Guam, Korea, Somalia, etc...But I also have no doubt that your claims of "...worked the equivilent of DXCC several times over..." is one of your biggest shams.

One thing's certain...N0IMD ain't on the list.

No...I'm not either, but then I'm not making an issue of it, either! =)

That's Brain's little way of trying to express his ego, suggesting that no one can trump his comments.

Funny how a little common sense do exactly that.

They would need to "notice" the transmission in progress, but getting complaints would very likely get him on the list of things to listen for so you may be right... But, not hearing a knock on the door does not mean the FCC is agreeing that the activity is legal.

Sorta like K1MAN's pending renewal application... Given enough time, they will take care of it, if it doesn't go away on it's own....

The problem is though, The monitoring station is in chicago, which I'm 300 miles away from, and my signal can't be heard up there. Secondly hearing it and it being legal is another issue. The station is located on 13.556.00 MHz LSB and 6.950 MHZ AM and anyone that knows propergation knows that those bands skip, even Part 15 on those bands can skip very good.

Hello, Robert. Welcome to our little den of iniquity.

Expect little...Laugh a lot...take little seriously here and you'll have fun.

Morkie's of the opinion that if someone files a complaint or comment that the lack of immediate response means he's justified in doing things illegally.

Same for Toiddie (Todd, N9OGL). Toiddie's worse, actually, because he's actually admitted to or made reference to numerous violations of federal law over the years, including illegally modifying ultralight aircraft....The idea that there may be an aircraft over my head that's being operated by a kiddie-porn anime freak give me the willies.

They're getting much more robust in their efforts to shut down the "broadcasters" as any perusal of FCC NOV's / NOUO files will reveal.

887. How does one become an A-1 Op?

How does someone become an A-1 Op?

"Only the best operators can qualify for the A-1 Operator Club, amateurs who have met the highest operating standards (details on request). But you can't apply; you must be recommended independently by two amateurs who already belong to the A-1 Operator Club. Who knows? Fine-tune your operating skills, and one of these days you may be pleasantly surprised when the mailman delivers an A-1 Operator Club certificate."

from: http://www.arrl.org/awards/#a1

First organized in May 1933, the ARRL A-1 Operator Club has a proud history and occupies an important place in Amateur Radio tradition. Communications Manager Ed Handy, W1BDI, announced its formation with these words in July 1933 QST:

Are you an A-1 Operator? Excellence in stations has often been emphasized. Yet, station performance, equipment, adjustment, etc., are but part of the story. The operation of the equipment, knowledge of procedure, and general communications technique are of very great importance in determining the results of any station. To bring attention to good operating as a paramount issue, and to give it something of the importance it deserves we are this month announcing in these columns the launching of a club for A-1 operators.

By early 1934, the roster of recognized A-1 operators had swelled to more than 400; by the end of 1938, to 1,000. Then, as now, nominations were not made lightly; through the years, recognition as an A-1 Operator has represented an unsolicited acknowledgment of one's high standing among one's peers.

Much is said about the handful of radio amateurs whose operating practices do not quite measure up. Not enough is said about those who, by contrast, lead by example - who set the standard for others to follow. Let us correct that now. Let us honor them as A-1 Operators and in so doing, honor the best in Amateur Radio. - David Sumner, K1ZZ

the slip is truly freudian however and reflect steve clear and passionate desire to some from of violnece and/or enforce some form of Dominace over me in short steve feels mest MUST assert himself as alpha male over me his beef is simple years ago in response to his implied death threat I made a fool of him and his ego can't let that go so he has engaged in lies threat exhortion (which backfired when he tired to black mail with I do hide although i do advertise either)

It's a ham radio group. Ham op's are the most inmature bunch of spoiled tightwads you'll ever want to meet. They are even worse than the stinky bunch of old pathetic white men that show up for model railroad swap meets and train show flea markets.

Believe me when I tell you, you can find any and all varieties of white trash at any hamfest so expect the same, and even worse in the ham radio NG's.

I mean we are talking about people who have been known to send human fecal matter and dead mice in gift boxes to people via the US Postal Service or toss anti-freeze contaminated meat scraps in the yards of people they don't like with pets.
Both the above examples took place during the infamous 20 Meter net wars from years ago and you can be sure that there are those who wold do the same stuff again today if given the chance.

951. FCC suspends Felon's Amateur License

>From the ARRL Letter:

"The FCC has ordered that David Edward Cox, W5OER, of Pride, Louisiana, be stripped of his Technician class Amateur Radio license. In October 2005, the FCC sent Cox an Order to Show Cause to initiate a hearing proceeding to determine if Cox, who's serving time on several felony convictions, possessed the requisite character to remain an FCC licensee or should face license revocation. The FCC says Cox failed to respond to the show-cause order. A Commission administrative law judge subsequently concluded that Cox had waived his right to a hearing, terminated the proceeding and released an Order of Revocation December 4."

Other details on the ARRL website.

FCC has been using its 1990 "Character Order" against amateurs convicted of felonies and some other violations for several years now. Basically it comes down to whether a person convicted of a serious nonradio violation can be trusted to hold an FCC license grant.

it is a parcualr notion but

OTOH I do see a due process issue that could back to bite the FCC given he was in jail acording to your rprint it could be argued (dependingg on the exact facts of the matter) that he was denied his due process rights

Tsk, tsk, you DO need a new browser...one that DOES have the header information up-front.

Do you need a HANDWRITTEN "signature" for every message?
Sorry, Google doesn't provide that.

How about a PGP key "signature?" You don't use one, though.

Are you an officer of the law that you DEMAND "proper identification?" If so, give us your shield number.

>In the case of the "Avery Fine" posts, you went on to deny that you

Poor lil Jimmie, capable of selective memory (when the occasion calls for it). Sorry, Jimmie, I DID explain the circumstances of using an old screen name THEN.

That you don't want to admit what I explained just explains
YOUR "profile" of activities in here...

Oh, oh...its Mother Superior Time again! :-)

Tsk, you just won't let some past faux pas go, will you?

No, in order to put the WORST light on your opponents (to your lordly opinions on What Should Be), you go overboard and try to swim like a shark. :-)

>So what? You've told us that same tired old story many times.
>It does not make your opinion more valid than mine.

1. It was well before your time.

2. It was in the military...where you've NEVER served.

3. It involved radio communications on a far-larger scale than any AMATEUR station, W1AW and Barry G.'s
"shacks" combined.

4. As a civilian I began in commercial broadcasting after the military, then moved to California in 1956 and began working in aerospace while going to college during whatever time was free for me. What were you doing in 1956? Crapping in your diapers?

5. I've identified my electronics industry employers in this newsgroup. You've NEVER identified who you work for or what you work at (except in most vague terms).

6. You won't admit that radio communications exists outside of AMATEUR radio or that ANY experience gained in commercial work is worth anything.

7. Because I wrote my experiences, work history, etc.,
AND that I am an opponent to your lordly opinions
you will naturally discount anything I say. :-)

Poor baby...you get all upset when someone comes along and doesn't like your lordly "superiority" in everything? That those who disagree with you "behave badly?" :-)

TS, Jimmie. This is Usenet-Internet...get USED to it. :-)

>Not the point. You keep trying to misdirect, but it doesn't work.

is "misdirection?" Tsk, tsk.

In a way it does. You've claimed to be a for-pay electronics engineer (getting money is the definition of being professional) yet you are NOT a member of any professional engineering association. Why is that? Do you think you are "too good" for such organizations?

I've been an IEEE member since 1973. What were you doing in 1973 (other than avoiding the draft and military service)?

>> Now, you have alluded to be an "electronics professional"

>Where?

You've never explained WHERE, Jimmie, not even for WHOM. :-)

Can we put you down as UNEMPLOYED? That seems to be honest based on what you've said in here... :-)

>I don't "make a radio out of junk salvage", Len.

Ah, but you DID, you DID! It was all explained on Kees Talen's website! Not to mention your bragging about it in here... :-)

>So why should you be trusted or believed now,if you say you are not
>"Slow Code"?

Who's that?

Why would I be "FOR" any radiotelegraphy...and in amateur radio?

Okay, while "questions" are being raised, how's this:

Why should you be trusted or believed now if you deny being a rapist and murder and/or homosexual?

>I'm not what you describe at all. If anything, you've described your >behavior, Len. All the insulting nicknames, threats of violence, >SHOUTING, lecturing, and much more.

"Threats of violence?" :-)

I don't play any musical instrument but my wife is a violinist.
On the other hand, I don't run around saying "No Violins!"

"Shouting?" I'm rather silent when writing, not even the lips move. :-)

Oh, oh, ohhhh, you think the use of CAPITAL LETTERS is "shouting?" Tsk, tsk, no wonder you never took up any ham RTTY or extoled its use... :-) [old Model 15s wrote ONLY in caps] TTYs must have been SO LOUD!!!

"Insulting nicknames?" You no doubt think so. Sometimes you act just like the stereotypical Mother Superior with knuckle-spank ruler whacking away...but you don't realize that this isn't parochial school and all of us are NOT catholic! Worse yet, you are NOT the supreme judge of What Should Be. Really!

Why do you feel so strongly that you should NOT be opposed to any of your lordly opinions? Is your ego that big?

>But I do occasionally know more than you about something, like when the

Ah, yes, pulling out little snippets of "bad form" from my old posts again! :-)

Yes, CIVILIAN Miccolis, I DID make a faux pas there...but I WAS IN the military in Japan, on voluntary service no less. In the ARMY we weren't supposed to be expert on all the current models of USSR aircraft or the EXACT distances from Them to Us. [you did NOT specify Statute Miles versus Nautical Miles...or even Kilometers in units of distance]

You have NEVER served in any military. You were NEVER even close to the USSR when it existed. You were safe at home somewhere in the USA and could freely point fingers at and make nasty comments to those of us who DID SERVE our country in the military. [Bytebrothers' phrase invoked]

>Someone could have 20 years military service, multiple patents, a Ph.D.
>in EE and be the chief engineer of a major radio manufacturing company.

1. You have NO MILITARY EXPERIENCE.

2. You have NO PhD...in anything.

3. You have NO "multiple patents" (such as Brian Kelly's "26").

4. We don't know WHO you work for...or your position there.

Okay, you have NO worries about whom you wrote about! :-)

>Yet if that person were a procodetest advocate, and showed up here on >rrap, it's a very safe bet you'd make fun of and insult him or her.

ABOUT THE "NECESSITY" TO HAVE AN AMATEUR RADIO TELEGRAPHY TEST.

Hello? Is it a WORD OF GOD that we should all be "respectful" and nice-nice to all morsepersons? Are they to be "shielded" from any (even the slightest hint) disagreement about the morse code test?

Hay, Jimmie, like you think you are GOD and that any opinion against a morse code test is "blasphemy" or "heretical?"

YOU are making yourself look no only foolish but downright idiotic by implying such things.

>Nope. I just know more than you about some things. That really seems to >bother you, Len - so much that you are compelled to attack me >personally.

Any time you want to portray yourself as a "military expert" you can bet your life savings on being "attacked!" You WILL DESERVE it.

The same goes for your alleged expertise in aerospace...or commercial communications...or military communications... or the electronics industry in general. All you want to do is APPEAR "knowledgeable" and, of course, "superior."

>I've not spoken of my work here. Nor do I intend to.

Yes, everyone has gathered that. If you did, you would HAVE to be AFRAID of ridicule since it, in all probability, does NOT involve either radio or communications!

>I asked why I should believe you. You can't seem to come up with a >reason.

...I cannot be believed by a GOD OF RADIO! :-)

>That's a textbook example of a double standard on your part, Len.

"Double standard?!?"

I call it TAKING ONE POSITION.

Namely that position is AGAINST the morse code test.

Why is that such a heinous fault? [the 'why' is rhetorical since you are the nasty person to anyone advocating the elimination of the code test...no problem to anyone on that]

>"Leo" and I had many respectful, civil, substantive exchanges here. The >same is true of myself and K2UNK (a director of NCI, no less!), K0HB, >and even WK3C (who used to be WA6VSE, but who got his Extra and a >vanity call, and now is busy working DX on HF and fighting the BPL >threat). Plus several others.

Tsk, Miccolis is ever the "gentleman" in his own eyes...:-)

To others' eyes it is a different matter! :-)

>And why are you shouting, Len? That just makes you look immature.

Knock it off, Mother Superior. You still have a bad habit.

Go get laid. Lose your virginity. It will make you better.

NASA wanted me but I had to turn them down. To much work to do down here on earth trying to educate radio amateurs on how to be better radio amateurs.

No, the bands are going to get worse over the long haul. We got people that don't want to be skilled knowledgable hams. If they're too lazy to learn CW they are going to be too lazy to learn other things too. Technical discussions will decline. It will start to sound like CB.

I give ham radio fifteen years after the code requirement is eliminated to totally get there, but it will be noticable that it's going downhill quality wise within the first five years.

Just listen to the no-code ignorance on repeaters, you don't think thats no going to migrate to HF?

Yes to all that, but the point I wanted to make was that CW is another way to get a message through. It's another tool in the tool box that can be used when other tools are not available. A ham that doesn't know CW doesn't have that tool. Hope he has a spare mic.

You need to get a grip on reality and get a life, you seem to spend more time in his life than you do in your own.

Troad ffrom Omgea One dserves dgo truds. Morke Mrogan lieks dog truds to OK, Mark. Let's see if you can get off your dyslexic ass and join Roger in trying to figure out who I am.

Big HInt. I am NOT Steve.
Another Big Hint...I am NOT Roger, either.

I am most certainly NOT No Code, so that leaves you without suspects.

Oh, and Mark? We most certainly know that your claim of being a Geophysist is another of your many shams.
You sit on your unemployed arse day in and day out and flood the Newsgroups with your insanity.

Clearly, Mark, you have some yet unadressed issues you must deal with.

You clearly are "not all there".

Lemmee guess . . you couldn't find a job in industry because you didn't have any credentials or salable experience in the "industrial art" field, whatever that is, you couldn't find a job so you joined the Army. Right? No biggie any way you look at it, lotta clueless kids did that back then including several of my ham buddies/classmates who opted for the Navy. I find it necessary once again Sweetums to remind you that neither NTC Great Lakes or Monmouth where the Army shipped you for training were accredited to pass out professional degrees of any flavor therefore you obviously did not become an "electronics engineer" no matter how you slice it. Monmouth gave you enough training to do what they needed your warm body to do for the Army and you apparently did what the Eagle paid you to do.

Your problem is that you keep trying to convince anybody who bothers to read your drivel that your Army training as a RTTY repeater babysitter over a half century ago is an engineering education. Which is obviously nothing less than farcical.

And in the end when it's all said and done particularly in your case the old looming question remains: What does any of this nonsense have to do with ham radio policy and your lack of relevance to ham radio??

As if subscibing to a magazine magically turns a bench tech like you into a "professional". With this twisted logic one could subscribe to QST and become a ham. Loon.

> 4. We don't know WHO you work for...or your position there.

Whattaya mean "we" Sweets? Have you become everybody when I wasn't looking? No, so drop the "we"crap, it's apparently only YOU who doesn't doesn't know what Jim does. I as well as many others know very well what he does where he does it and for what corportate entity and it's professional level electrical engineering with management responsibilities. A place you've never been.

That set of realities was fleshed out the night the group of RRAP-lurking PCTAs and NCTAs took to the the airwaves together and did real ham radio in all it's gentlemanly aspects. And you Sweetums couldn't even eavesdrop on the exchanges because you simply don't know how to do that . . so much for your "comms expertise" even at the hobby level eh?

I for one took note of the fact that you didn't have the gonads to stick your head up in the ensuing threads about that event. You knew better didn't ya you irrelevant old goat. Sez it all . .

Shove those antenna up the landlords ass. Ask him if he would rather have the antenna in the air or up his ass. If he says he wants it up his ass then break it off for him.

Landlords suck assholes.

Actually, Morkie is lying again.

I AM responding to his cross-posts here to answer this one, however Morkie KNOWS that I do not routinely post to any other NG than rec.radio.amateur.policy.

No, Morkie...What IS clear is that you are incompetent in English comprehension.

There you go with more of your paranoia, Morkie.

Follow the headers, you moron.

Nothing in ANY religious document says it's OK to trash multiple newsgroups with your filth.

As you can plainly see here, you're making a fool out of yourself with these rediculous crosspoists and profanity.

Perhaps someones else can find the right combination of words that will get through your mentally compromised cloud, but I doubt it.

The disgrace is yours, KB9RQZ. You're the one who insists that others suggest you eat their excrement both in the body of messages and in hundreds of subject line hijackings.

You're sick, Morkie. Seek help.

And location, mode and signal report. You don't have to confirm which "Mission For America" you're performing, though. But if you're a braggart as Robesin is, you'll probably include that as well. Then you go into that "1,000 yard stare" trance.

The way I understand our constitution, a man creates a debt to society with crime, once he pays this debt he is to have his rights restored; this keeps society from creating dangerous and dark forces through abuses of its' citizens. While I do believe special arguments can be made of the type of crime a criminal commits, child molestation, premeditated murder, rape, etc., in most instances the above should be followed. I think one clue is the statement in our constitution, paraphrased here, " ... endowed with unalienable rights by his creator ..." This is best seen when one applies thought and sees that any tampering with such rights immediately infringes upons ones rights to the "pursuit of happiness", freedom and access to those resources granted us by our creator.

I am no attorney, however, I suspect that could only be made to work against felons who are incarcerated or on probation/parole.

Still, the logic fails me of why you would ever revoke someones license who had been convicted of, say, a felony regarding bank fraud--felony drunk driving--manslaughter--etc. This type of logic, once again, demonstrates why I hold such a low esteem for some in amateur radio.

Most likely, in all cases, if the criminal had spent more time in the hobby aspect of radio his desire to commit a crime would have been diminished! Best we help this criminals before society suffers, rather than punish them after the fact (and someone ends up without his/her property, or worse, dead!)

From the European perspective, I do not understand this discussion.
Most European countries (except Russia) removed the CW requirement after a few months of the ITU WRC decision that CW test is not required at frequencies below 30 MHz.

I haven't observed any problems with persons using the HF bands without the CW test.

Listen for yourself, can you tell which European operator has passed the CW test and which one has not passed the test.

Sure it's possible.

The FCC's already expanded the phone bands in anticipation of the influx. Hopefully it will give folks some shoulder room in the short run, but as soon as all the welfare Generals and Extras hit the air with their new "lean-yar amp-lee-fyers" that margin will go back to nothing.

I understand. I don't have have a problem with that aspect of the organization, and since it involved my children, I'd prefer to keep it the way it is. Adults can do what they want.

But is has nothing to do with the BSA. Robesin is not in the BSA and I wouldn't want him around my children or anyone else's. But he probably has lots of contact with Cadets; hopefully they're using at least the rule of two.

That's not what I said, Morkie, and idiot that you are, you've reposted the very same words I DID say over and over.

You really don't realize how foolish you look trying to pass off your tale when you re-quote my words that prove you a liar.

Yep...

"...I will conceed that YOU know two things that I WILL NEVER KNOW...."

And there you have it...

Go ask a fourth grader to explain it to you, Morkie, because you certainly haven't caught on yet.

You may "credit" me with it, Morkie, but the facts are you're lying.

Even Frankie of Silliland pointed out that your forged-post claims against me were invaldi, but you certainly don't let facts get in the way of your rants.

Oh?

And WHO supports your claims, Morkie?

None of the Feeble Five would support you even when you point-blank asked them.

Everyone else here, anonymouse or otherwise tell you you're wrong.

The only one here who thinks you're a great guy is you, and you ahve even said that you lie and lie often.

No I haven't.

You have.

You keep insisting on repeating the same lie over and over, insisting that my words said anything other than what I said.

> you keep trying to brazen it out and claim everybody else is respoble > for the words you typed

Nope.

What I DO claim is that you're too idiotic and incompetent in English comprehension to see how stupid you've made yourself look for the last 2 months.

But you go right ahead and keep it up...You make my "job" so much easier when you keep requoting my words and then make it crystal clear that you can't read it.

Nope.

You're the hijacker.

With each and every "excerment" subject line that you try and mislead with.

Mark...You're an idiot...You're making it worse EVERY TIME you try the same lame approach to flaming me.

It doesn't work because it's crystal clear to everyone who DIDN'T get an education riding the short yellow bus that your English skills suck and you're desperately lashing out.

> You insist I eat your #### it is not a hijack to respond to your lies

I am sure you are.

But as long as you keep lying, misquoting and acting like a 2-year old, I'm going to keep rubbing your nose in it, so you might as well get used to it, fatboy.

> you are sick that you write such #### and then try to deny it

I didn't deny the quote, Morkie, but YOU are the one using the profanity, not me.

What I deny is your insistance that it says anythig other than what I wrote.

" Morkie, I will conceed that you know two things that I will never know...What it's like to lick my excrement off of another man's genitals, and the going welfare rates in Michigan."

I clearly stated that YOU know things I will never know...

Now...You can keep trying to spin that any way you care to, but it comes up the same every time...I never said YOU know my excrement...I said you KNOW YOUR OWN...

That's certainly one way to look at it.

Here's another, somewhat similar view:

An amateur radio license is not a right. It is a privilege, granted by a process that includes passing the required examinations and demonstrating that the licensee is trustworthy to follow the rules and regulations.

The FCC assumes that all license applicants are trustworthy, unless and until they prove they are not. Conviction of a serious crime is considered by the FCC to be an indication of not being trustworthy.

Note that the conviction is considered to be an indication, not proof.
License revocation is not automatic. The person whose license was revoked was offered the opportunity to show that they were still trustworthy in terms of an FCC license. But the person in question did not reply to the FCC's letter at all, so FCC had the license revoked.

> I am no attorney, however, I suspect that could only be made to work against > felons who are incarcerated or on probation/parole.

Maybe. OTOH, the argument that a license is a privilege and not a right might win out.

> Still, the logic fails me of why you would ever revoke someones license who > had been convicted of, say, a felony regarding bank fraud--felony drunk > driving--manslaughter--etc.

Because such convictions indicate a lack of trustworthiness. Or to put it another way, the ability to make good choices and control one's behavior. Someone convicted of felony drunk driving obviously has problems in those areas.

And note again that the revocations are not automatic.

> This type of logic, once again, demonstrates > why I hold such a low esteem for some in amateur radio.

It is the FCC, not amateurs, who make these decisions.

> Most likely, in all cases, if the criminal had spent more time in the hobby > aspect of radio his desire to commit a crime would have been diminished!

Maybe.

It would be interesting to see the rate of serious criminality among licensed radio
amateurs compared to the general population.

> Best we help this criminals before society suffers, rather than punish them > after the fact (and someone ends up without his/her property, or worse, > dead!)

You're talking prevention rather than punishment - and I agree.

Whoa! Let's be accurate! Radio frequencies are a "natural resource", granted us by our creator and the laws of physics he/she/it/"the-aliens" constructed. Why I will allow a gov't agency to manage these in a manner which is ultimately governed by "the people", I will not support laws, rules or regulations which run contrary to such ... or in short, the people control the use of the air waves, and the air waves are made available to the people in a very logical method.

> The FCC assumes that all license applicants are trustworthy, unless and
The FCC can assume anything it wishes, but I insist it obeys the constitution and the laws of the creator in doing so.

> Maybe. OTOH, the argument that a license is a privilege and not a right

I don't believe there is any argument of merit which can be proposed which would take radio frequencies from us, they are simply one of those "inalienable rights" our creator has gifted upon the peoples of this earth.
I would quite openly question anyones sanity who claim differently.

> It is the FCC, not amateurs, who make these decisions.
I live in America, I grew up when the constitution was not "interpreted", rather, we took it for granted our forefathers "said what they meant, and meant what they said."

I am pleased we agree on the above, I like to live in a safe country,

I don't know if or when they dropped it), but the Soviet Union had a no code HF license starting around 1956. Japan also had one at one time.

From the point of view of the "DX", like you Paul, I'm glad that the low end of the 40m and 75 meter phone bands was extended. I PREFER SSB, a 20 meters has been open to the U.S. on "good days" for around 20 minutes.

Due to the influence of the Israel Amateur Radio Club, the code requirement has been kept. With the IARC's other policies, including operating events when relgious hams can't operate, pushing for a five year requirement to convert a foreign license for new immegrants, etc, they really have become the superfulous old man's CW club, dragging the hobby down with them.

I "suppose" they (the FCC) could consider a way of reinstating said license - much like any State Bureau of Motor Vehicles would for a person found DUI/etc - if proper conditions were placed into effect. I doubt that will ever happen.

Quite frankly, I don't see what "CB/Ham/2 way" radio in general - has to do with a "Felon" - UNLESS they were used in the commission of said crimes - which by the way - carries additional penalties.

I mean - if a person has it in them to kill someone - rob a bank, etc..... radio "didn't" drive them to it - unless maybe they're looking for cash to build a bigger station, etc. That is laughable. People commit crimes for various reasons. Money, Jealousy, definate Mental impairment which breeds anti-social behaviour - and so on. Was Hitler a "ham"? Probably not. Was Osama Bin Laden or any of his ass kissing henchmen? Probably not! I am willing to bet - the majority of criminals have had NO or very little exposure to radio - with exception of maybe CB and FRS - since they're so prevalent and easily used and acquired. But even at that - the aforementioned issues are mainly at fault and I'm sorry - I fail to see where "Radio" has anything to do with it.

I will agree with the one poster - had anyone "convicted" of a crime who "was" into Ham - been more involved in the hobby, it "may" have prevented said crimes. FWIW - crimes differ from state to state as to what may be considered as a "felony". What may be a felony in one state, may not be in yet another.
Then again - some people - regardless if it is "ham" radio, "CB", pick up games of sports, etc. - lose their cool so very easily - and BAM - a crime is committed. People have died at youth sports games when the "parents" went nuts and attacked others. You can't blame the "Youth" sports for those deaths - anymore than you can Ham radio for a crime. People are just going bonkers more and more now days and they use any little excuse to try to justify their cause.

Not only "Ham", but CB and FRS as well, AND even on a Police channel on the scanner - a couple times - I've heard people argue to the point of telling others - they were going to kiss their ass. Yes, I've heard COPS get into it on the radio. Talk about "professionalism"! Yes, I've heard of fights on Ham and CB where one person is "trying" to talk and another - instead of acting like a gentleman - acts like an ass - and whalah - an argument ensues. Instead of changing channels or letting the issue drop - they pursue it. Some - yes - to the point of personally hunting the other down for an ass kicking or murder. That is "rage" which was brought on - not by radio - but by those who have issues dealing with others - who don't like to be crowded. The radio was only a means of them asserting their behaviour publicly - and finding a victim. Not much different than Road Rage.

You can't pick "just" HAM RADIO out of the bunch - any hobby, sport, activity, job, etc - can set people off.
Conducting research to see how many hams committed crimes - would be "less" interesting than one which shows how many accidents were as a result of using all radio modes while driving - be they Ham, CB, 2 way, etc. - AS OPPOSED to CELL PHONE! I don't EVER recall seeing the states cracking down on CBers or Hams - due to "irratic driving" as they are now - with Cells.

With the heavy use of Cell Phones, I'd be willing to bet that Ham radio "IF" responsible for ANY crimes - is like maybe 1/1000th of a percent - compared to cells - which are used for harassment, stalking, spying, etc.
"Maybe" - just "maybe" - I could go along to some very minor extent - but for the most part - I DOUBT Ham is as responsible for crimes as this post seems to suggest. IF there are any "psychologists/psychiatrists" out there or "social workers" who read these, PLEASE DO - chime in. I'd love to see your opinion as well.

It's not "ham radio", CB, vehicles, etc..... it is SELF CONTROL - which makes the difference.

However, back to the point, I too question the results of a hearing where the licensee was in jail. In California it is a felony to eat horsemeat. Perhaps there needs to be some relationship between the nature of the felony and the use of amateur radio. A pedophile might use ham radio to spread kiddie porn, but a horsemeat eater might be a good "ham."

Other countries are not a problem. Personally I do not attempt to predict what will happen in the US. However some fear that with easy licensing and the lax enforcement here that there could potentially be serious problems. They fear a repetition of what happened to the Citizens Band here. With little to no enforcement of violations, that band became such a sewer that you don't dare let kids listen to it. Recently two CB operators got into a fight over the radio, sought each other out, and one was killed. It is not the world we fear but ourselves.

Gee, maybe you should save your money and buy your OWN home, then you can do what you want with it.
An even better experience would be, buy a home with your own money and rent it to those that think "Landlords suck assholes"
After a few missed rent payments your outlook will suddenly change, you will wonder why does that %^&$#^$ think I should support him. It's not my fault he lost
a job, got fired, car broke down, had to take the kid to the emergency room.
It's not my fault he didn't save any money for a rainy day!
My most fun story is the guy that replaced a mailbox, he was in the middle of being kicked out. He went out and bought a $40 mailbox expecting me to pay for it.
I told him to keep the mailbox. When he left he took the mailbox. The post for this mailbox was a buried telephone pole, it wasn't going anywhere.
When I installed my new $5.00 mailbox I mounted a 2"x6" board to the pole with 5" x 5/16" lag bolts, then I mounted the mailbox to the 2x6 with seven 3 1/4" drywall
screws.
I would have liked to seen his face when he whacked that mailbox and it didn't go flying away. I hope he didn't hurt himself, NOT He was gone about three days before he did this. I waited another week and put up a new mailbox.

HELLO!

You are quite correct (and unalienable is used.) I am guilty of "clumping"

WRONGO, Mongo. When I enlisted (in 1952) I'd already been need a listing of them with/without payroll check stubs? :-)

You knew lots of "clueless kids?" The no-guts types who were afraid of bodily harm by NOT joining the USA or USMC?

Kellie never enlisted, took an oath, wore a uniform, did he?

"NTC Great Lakes?" You are confused as to what was where and for whom. [not unusual for Kellie]

I've NEVER claimed that the US military "gave me" any professional degrees. Didn't get or need any FCC license either. Got those all AFTER military service.

The closest I got to any great lakes was Fort Shridan, IL,
the repple-depple ("replacement depot" for civilian speak).
Close, but still inland from Lake Michigan. BASIC training at Fort Gordon, GA (was named Camp Gordon then), then signal school at Fort Monmouth, NJ.

>Monmouth gave you enough training to do what

That's something you never did...

YOUR PROBLEM is an inability to read, senior. I've never claimed that operation-maintenance of military communications equipment IN the military was any sort of equivalent education to engineering. It was a beginning for me with a direct introduction to BIG TIME HF radio comms, showed me what the big people did for real, not just puttering around in spare time at a hobby.
See:

http://sujan.hallikainen.org/BroadcastHistory/My3Years.pdf

for EXACTLY what I did with what and when.

BTW, in your getting things wrong department (very big in your case), I was NEVER trained as an "RTTY repeater babysitter." Those were the TTY operators and had a different MOS. My MOS (Military Occupation Specialty) was Microwave Radio Relay...stuff that handles voice or data (which was then teleprinter or facsimile).

>And in the end when it's all said and done particularly in your case >the old looming question remains: What does any of this nonsense have >to do with ham radio policy and your lack of relevance to ham radio??

What IS your problem (besides an inability to get along with those who disagree with your lordly opinions)?

Radio amateurs of today still use HF ham bands...as they did a half century ago. Some hams still use vacuum tube based transmitters...some, the "boatanchor" afficionados, use only tube-based radio equipment...the SAME as what was used a half century ago. Little change in technology (other than semiconductor use) from then to now to shove some HF RF out an antenna. Back then a final had its "plate dipped and grid peaked" in tune-ups...little change with a tube PA now.

Kellie, you ignorant code slut, the IEEE is a PROFESSIONAL ASSOCIATION and, to become a member in 1973 I had to get three affidavits from IEEE members attesting to my actual working IN electronics engineering and to the ability in doing such work. One of them was then a licensed radio amateur (and radio professional), KD6JG. No problem, it was the work I was doing and several corporations have paid me regularly to fulfill those responsibilities. One of them was then a licensed radio amateur (and radio professional), KD6JG.

"Bench test?" Yes, I was a hands-on type of engineer who wasn't afraid to get hands dirty or solder burns working on my own designs on a professional (or hobby) "bench." I've done work from the initial paper design on through applications testing and customer advice in the field.

So, what great things have come out of your MACHINE SHOP insofar as radio or electronics? Your SINGLE patent (you are co-inventor, not sole inventor) is for a mechanical bearing improvement. My single patent is for a radio subsystem, US 3,848,191 if you want to look it up in a patent gazeteer. No biggie, but it WORKED and flew in aircraft...an RCA Corporation 5-year R&D program.

I mean "WE" as the rest of the newsgroup participants, not some cozy little clique of eastern PA types who hang with each other, exchanging high-fives in mutual admiration of their morsemanship hobby.

"WE" ain't telepaths. "WE" ain't no klatch for Kode.

>I as well as many others know very well >what he does where he does it and for what corportate entity and it's >professional level electrical engineering with management

I've been in eastern PA but never worked for an eastern PA corporation or business. In case you ever get around to checking my resume' (that I've given in here), you will find I was Chief Engineer at Birtcher Instrument Division, Birther Corporation, Monterey Park CA. Management responsibility job. Designed semiconductor test sets.

I can list my employers again, if you need such...but it greatly upsets the Big "Major" of CAP who constantly pretends he is something when he's nothing. :-)

WHAT "corporate entity" is Miccolis' employer? Doing WHAT in that "electrical engineering?" Miccolis refuses to say anything but vague generalities about what he does for a living.

>"What does any of this nonsense have to do with ham radio policy and >your lack of relevance to ham radio??"

The "nonsense" is the fraternal-order NONSENSE that ONLY licensed radio amateurs can say anything about, for, or even vote on amateur radio regulations TO the federal government. That sort of nonsense stops with the ARRL.
ARRL doesn't grant radio licenses, the FCC does. FCC is part of the Federal Government. ARRL pretends they are a part of the government but they aren't...

The morse code test is part of GETTING INTO amateur radio.
If you want to discuss bandplans or operating on the HF bands (where you seem to be limited to), feel free to discuss that among yourselves (the licensed hams, that is).
I'm just against the code test.

A problem is that YOU and most of the other morsemen think that morsemanship is somehow "NECESSARY" to "qualify" for an amateur radio license. That is YOUR opinion, an emotional opinion not grounded in actual fact other than some nebulous "traditional" aspect (itself an emotional issue). The FCC doesn't think a code test is necessary for its determination of whether an amateur radio license applicant should be granted a license. They've said so since 1990. Even the IARU agrees since they pushed the revision of S25 at WRC-03.

...and another place where Mongo is Wrongo. :-) Ever hear of JTIDS? Teledyne Electronics, Inc, Newbury Park, CA, late 1970s for me. Joint Tactical Information Distribution System...for the military...spectrum spread so as not to interfere with TACAN..."command and control."

What is "whizzy" to you, Kellie? Something with more than 2 tubes or transistors in it? A transmitter that does NOT need a morse key to communicate? :-)

>> Tsk, Miccolis is ever the "gentleman" in his own eyes...:-)

>That set of realities was fleshed out the night the group of

Wow! Using MORSE CODE "in all it's gentlemanly aspects."

You did that ONCE some years ago. Morse code has been going AWAY for REAL radio communications for half a century. Amateur radio is the last holdout for morse code...ALL the commercial and military radio comms services use better, faster, more-accurate communications modes now. ALL.

>And you Sweetums >couldn't even eavesdrop on the exchanges because you simply don't know >how to do that . . so much for your "comms expertise" even at the hobby >level eh?

I've never claimed to be a MORSEMAN or have any abilities to "do morse." I've never needed or used it, nor been required to do so in radio communications for half a century...and I've communicated in commercial and military bands over more radio spectrum than are allowed amateurs.

>I for one took note of the fact that you didn't have the gonads to >stick your head up in the ensuing threads about that event. You knew >better didn't ya you irrelevant old goat. Sez it all . .

Why bother commenting on an obvious "good ol boys" club of morsemen "gathering" on the radio spectrum using morse code? The spark-and-galena "whizzies" of the 1920s were doing that long before you or any of the "good ol boys" of this group were born. :-)

>Jim has two kids, how many kids have YOU fathered SuperStud?

None that I know of. :-) Is that a "NECESSITY" for "qualifications" of amateur radio licensing? :-)

Are the VECs now demanding a sperm count for prospective radio amateurs at testing sessions? :-)

Is Miccolis legally married? After all, Kellie, your wife bailed out on you, didn't she? That must mean something about YOU, not me...my first died way too soon and I was lucky to get back together much later with my high school sweetheart...ain't no way either one of us is going to bail out of our marriage.

But, to you and some of the old morsemen (the Four Morsemen of the Apocalypse), lack of appreciation of morse code is an immoral and unethical fault and is probably indicative of homosexuality and worse, acting like on CB. :-)

Meanwhile, you and the Four Morsemen will go on behaving like Ornery Old Men, being very UNgentlemanly to anyone that doesn't worship your outdated and archaic morse code "skill." You've certainly fit YOUR profile in your nasty-gram quoted above.

But, you ARE a morseman and morsemen act like you do, so I have to forgive your lack of manners and charity.

You are forgiven...

But the rights flow only from the Constitution legally and otherwise.

Still it is an important distinction that it is in the Declaration of Independence but not in the Constitution. And is it important to understand the differences in their purposes.

The Declaration was designed to explain to the world why the colonies wished to separate themselves from England. It was intended to elicit sympathy and support from the enemies of England and to convince England's allies to stay out of it. The majestic rhetoric of "unalienable rights" and "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" were geared towards those goals.

On the other hand, the Constitution was designed to define how we were actually going to govern ourselves. The rhetoric of the Declaration is inappropriate

Let us take liberty as a very simple example. If that were included in the Constitution as an "unalienable" right, we wouldn't be able to lock up serial killers.

Let's also take that "pursuit of happiness" in terms of radio spectrum resources. If each of us could operate whenever, where ever, and however we pleased because we had the right to pursue happiness, it would be utter chaos and very few would actually be happy. In the early days of radio, that very situation existed and it caused problems and thus was born the predecessor to the FCC.

In every group or society, some type of structure is necessary to enable the group or society to survive and thrive. This means that there are rules and regulations in almost everything we do affecting our daily lives. That by its very nature limits people's rights.

Yes indeed. There are two (in fact more) documents protecting our rights and agreeing people are the true power, and NOT governments.

> The Declaration was designed to explain to the world why the colonies wished

Yes, and they did a very fine job of it. Indeed, I have not seen many papers which make humanity the reason for its arguments, and individual rights in particular. Some now wish to find reasons to weaken these premises and arguments, strange how societies can never rid themselves of fools destined to repeat the same mistakes ...

> On the other hand, the Constitution was designed to define how we were Absolutely NOT, while kings, rulers, dictators, powerful corporations, the wealthy, and the mentally challenged might confuse rights with rhetoric, those whose ancestral line runs back to these time, and the traditions carried forth to this time have no such confusions. There is no rhetoric in life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. There is not rhetoric in "God given rights." There is no rhetoric in being secure in person and property. You give me nightmares in the type of world you would allow to come. I only hope you never run for office, even dog catcher would worry me in your case! (however, you are probably a nice person)

> Let us take liberty as a very simple example. If that were included in the Preposterous, that is like arguing liberty = murder. We all have absolute liberty, granted by our creator, we govern ourselfs in its use. The people have that right, the government does not, unless it serves as only a tool of the people in doing so. There is much confusion here, laws do NOT give us rights and/or liberty, they only serve to remove or control those. Before we apply law, we are only governed by our creator, and he has given us all free will.

> Let's also take that "pursuit of happiness" in terms of radio spectrum

We all also have unlimited rights to the pursuit of happiness, limits on those pursuits are simply when they deprive another of exercising their rights to such pursuits. A child learns this early in school, a finer tutoring includes sharing ... if we deny others what we have, especially though little tests and requirements as a policy of picking and choosing "who we want to play with", we are NOT maintaining order, we are screwing people, plain and simple, in fact only a simple person would have difficultly seeing through that rubbish.

No Dee, you are simply another, "The sky is falling!", decrier. No Dee, the sky is not falling, some are simply made a prisoner to their own fears, fears which lead them into depriving other Americans of their rights--in so doing, the "champions of justice" end up becoming the evil which controls, deprives, and punishes people who do not think as they do. These groups have come and gone through our history.

Open your eyes, todays world is much different than the one which you were born into. Today you can call anywhere in the world from anywhere, if you are even in most remote areas a cell phone allows you such access; if that fails, there are satellite phone. Today, the internet will let you converse to anyone anywhere in the world, allow you to view and access materials anywhere in the world or share any such materials to anyone, anywhere in the world.

In this world, amature radio tries to keep itself isolated as an island, a religious club of fanatic devotes with far too many decrying the sky is falling ... the sky is not falling ... radio is dying.

The good news is, much awaits amateur radio's future from its' ashes. From those ashes will spring forth a service which will bear little resemblance to the old, antique and outdated practices of the past.

It is an exciting time to be alive ...

Warmest regards,
JS

I agree!

The problem is, they are a limited resource, to be shared among a lot of people.

For example, if each of us 300,000,000 Americans were to ignore the other six billion humans on earth, and divide up the HF spectrum equally, how much would we each get to call our own?
Less than a tenth of a Hertz on HF. Even if we allow time separation, so that 100 Americans share the same allocation, that's less than 10 Hz each.

Agreed - but who determines what the logical method is? What you see in radio regulations is a set of compromises among differing uses.

For example, I think there are some folks who would be happy to see amateur radio eliminated, or reduced in power/spectrum/privileges so much that it would effectively disappear. Those folks would rather see the amateur bands used for something else, like broadcasting, BPL, etc.
To them, ham radio itself is illogical.

OTOH, we hams think that polluting the radio spectrum with BPL noise is illogical. Yet we have to push and prod the regulators to understand that simple idea.

btw, this "character" issue isn't just aimed at hams. It was originally used against broadcasters.

Do you think each of us has the inalienable right to operate an uncoordinated transmitter on, say, 90.9 MHz? I don't, and I don't think you do either.

Think about why.

> > It is the FCC, not amateurs, who make these decisions.

The Constitution has always been interpreted. That's one of the reasons for the Supreme Court, and why it has struck down laws that contradicted their interpretation of the Constitution. Not a new thing.

And one of the greatest wisdoms of those who wrote and ratified the Constitution (near here, in Philadelphia, btw) was that it would not be a static, unchangeable document, but rather one that would evolve and develop over time. Yet at the same time, the amendment process was set up to try to keep changes from happening on a whim.

A pretty ingenious system, all told.

Exactly. And that safety means reasonable regulations, laws, and other measures to ensure order.

At the same time, we must be careful that we do not try to obtain "safety" at the price of our freedoms.

This is increasingly becoming a pipe dream, as more and more neighborhoods put together * CCA's or whatever they call them this week, and dictate what color paint you can have on your home, what sort of topiary, and countless other minutia. Covenant communities should be outlawed. Whatever happened to a man's home being his castle (i.e. personal property rights)?

Riley isn't doing his job?

I think what I wrote before one of the recent restructurings was, "What I fear most about eliminating the Morse Code Exam is a lack of enforcement, and what I fear most about maintaining the Status Quo is a lack of enforcement."

A lack of enforcement is a lack of enforcement, and a Morse Code Exam CANNOT be used as a substitute.

Be sure to collect evidence of USA violations and turn it in to Riley.
Don't just pass it to your OO.

I assume you're referring to my goofy adventure with a Model T spark could put up antennas that worked. Care to take this topic further??

Good thing you added the caveat.

out here in the great hinterland... more than an hour drive from any of the great 'blue' cities. you can still find land that is wild and free, where neighbors help you put up towers instead of putting them down, and the big question at a zoning bylaw hearing is if the new bylaw is meant to stop celular companies from coming into town... the question was asked because the person didn't want the bylaw to slow them down, because they couldn't get service now and wanted it!

No I'm saying that all our rights do have limits and that it is for a very good reason. If our rights were absolute, they would have no limits and we could indeed kill each other to attempt to insure those rights. Society has decided (and rightly so) that doesn't work too well for the survival of society. The moment society decides that some rules are required to make that society work, then our rights are limited.

Again if it were an absolute right, one could pursue that at the expense of others. Again society has decided that doesn't work too well and of necessity puts some limits on it. Then it becomes a matter of opinion whether those limits are appropriate.

It so happens that I think code is a basic of radio and should be required at a basic level. I do not consider it a filter, right of passage or other such nonsense.

Again, I'm not the one worried about it. I see people every month joining our ranks. If you look at the statistics, it is quite obvious that amateur radio is not dying. It has its ups and downs but the numbers are quite robust.

Since it's not dying, there won't be any ashes. I've seen the proposals so far and there is nothing exciting in them. Digital voice? Ho-hum, I've got that on my cell phone. And it can be implemented any time hams want to spend money on new equipment New digital modes? Sure but they're just new flavors of the same old thing. Hooking to the internet? Already been done and that's not terribly exciting either. Once upon a time, radio led technology (i.e. linked repeater systems with phone patches pre-date cell phones). Now it doesn't and there is nothing exciting in emulating commercial implementations in amateur radio.

Basically, radio is a mature field. As with any mature field, improvements can be made but that's about it.

The excitement comes in the personal growth and development and in helping others to discover those for themselves.

Actually, those conditions are already in place.

The person who had his license revoked could, after getting out of prison, apply for a new license and take the test over again. The application asks if the person has ever had a license revoked, so the person could give the details, and then say that s/he'd reformed and would follow the rules.

That revocation doesn't mean the person can never ever have a license.

The point isn't "Radio" - it's trustworthiness. At least that's FCC's point of view.

If a person has it in them to commit a serious crime, why should we trust that they will follow FCC radio regulations? That's FCC's point of view.

we are simply hearing about it more.

Being mostly a CW operator, I've not heard anything like that on the ham bands.

Of course. And ultimately it is the person who is responsible.

I think there's a basic difference with cell phones. With radio, it's one-way, with a phone, it's two-way. A lot of mobile radio is a roundtable-type discussion, where you spend only a small part of the time talking. And you can put the mike down when not talking!

Perhaps the biggest factor is simply popularity. There are less than a million US hams, and of those, the number actively operating mobile is a couple hundred thousand at most.

Compare that to the more than 100 million cell phones now in use....

By definition, radio amateurs are licensed. There is no licenseless route.

Also, Len has admitted to putting an unlicensed transmitter on the air in 1948, at the age of 16.
Perhaps that is why he wanted to keep anyone under the age of 14 out of amateur radio.

The 30 Steps below will help all No-Code Hams, it will also help you to find others just like yourself. These 30 steps should also be added to the present writtens.

Step One: Use as many "Q" signals as possible. Yes, I know they were invented solely for CW and are totally inappropriate for two meter FM, but they are fun and entertaining. They keep people guessing as to what you really meant. I.E. "I'm going to QSY to the phone." Can you really change frequencies to the phone? QSL used to mean, "I am acknowledging receipt", but now it appears to mean, "yes" or "OK". I guess I missed it when the ARRL changed the meaning. It is also best to use "OK" and "QSL" together. Redundancy is the better part of Lid-dom.

Step Two: Never laugh when you can say "HI HI". No one will ever know you aren't a long time CW rag-chewer if you don't tell them. They'll think you've been on since the days of Marconi.

Step Three: Utilize an alternative vocabulary. Use words like "destinated" and "negatory". It's OK to make up your own words here. I.E. "Yeah Tom, I "pheelbart zaphonix" occasionally myself."

Step Four: Always say "XX4XXX" (Insert your own call) "for I.D." As mentioned in Step One, anything that creates redundancy is always encouraged. That's why we have the Department of Redundancy Department. (Please note that you can follow your call with "for identification purposes" instead of "for I.D." While taking longer to say, it is worth more "LID points".

Step Five: The better the copy on two meter FM, the more you should use phonetics. Names should be especially used if they are short or common ones. I.E. "My name is Al... Alpha Lima" or "Jack.. Juliet Alpha Charlie Kilo." If at all possible use the less common HF phonetics "A4SM... America, Number Four, Sugar Mexico." And for maximum "LID points", make up unintelligible phonetics. "My name is Bob... Billibong Oregano Bumperpool."

Step Six: Always give the calls of yourself and everyone who is (or has been) in the group, whether they are still there or not. While this has been unnecessary for years, it is still a great memory test. You may also use "and the group" if you are an "old timer" or just have a bad memory. Extra points for saying everyone's call and then clearing in a silly way "K2PKK, Chow, Chow."

Step Seven: Whenever possible, use the wrong terminology. It keeps people guessing. Use "modulation" when you mean "deviation", and vice-versa.

Step Eight: If someone asks for a break, always finish your turn, taking as long as possible before turning it over. Whenever possible, pass it around a few times first. This will discourage the breaker, and if it is an emergency, encourage him to switch to another repeater and not bother you.

Step Nine: Always ask involved questions of the person who is trying to sign out. Never let him get by with just a "yes" or "no" answer. Make it a question that will take him a long time to answer.

Step Ten: The less you know on a subject, the more you should speculate about it in the roundtable. Also the amount of time you spend on the subject should be inversely proportionate to your knowledge of the subject even though you have no damn clue.

Step Eleven: Always make sure you try to communicate with only a handheld and a rubber duck antenna. Also, make sure you work through a repeater that you can hear very well, but it cannot hear you. This will put out a kind of "LID mating call": "Well, Joe, I can hear the repeater just fine here. I wonder why it can't hear me?" You will score maximum LID points if you are mobile, and with the radio lying in the passenger seat.

Step Twelve: If you hear two amateurs start a conversation, wait until they are twenty seconds into their contact, and then break in to make a call, or better yet to use the auto-patch. Make sure you keep the repeater tied up for at least three minutes. This way, once the two have re-established contact, they won't even remember what they were talking about.

Step Thirteen: You hear someone on the repeater giving directions to a visiting amateur. Even if the directions are good, make sure you break in with your own "alternate route but better way to get there" version. This is most effective with several other "would-be LIDs", each giving a different route. By the time the visiting amateur unscrambles all the street names whizzing by in his mind, he should have moved out of the range of the repeater. This keeps you from having to stick around to help the guy get back out of town, later.

Step Fourteen: If an annoying station is bothering you, make sure your other "LID" buddies have a "coded" frequency list. Even though "CODES" are strictly forbidden on Amateur Radio, it's really neat to practice "James Bond" tactics.

Step Fifteen: Always use the National Calling Frequency for general conversations. The more uninteresting, the longer you should use it. Extra points are awarded if you have recently move from an adjacent frequency for no reason. Make sure when DX is "rolling" in on 52.525 that you hang out there and talk to your friends five miles down the road about the good old CB days!

Step Sixteen: Make sure that if you have a personal problem with someone, you should voice your opinion in a public forum, especially a net. Make sure you give their name, call, and any other identifying remarks. For maximum points, make sure the person in question is not on the repeater,

Step Seventeen: Make sure you say the first few words of each transmission twice, especially if it is the same thing each time. Like "roger, roger" or "fine business, fine business". I cannot stress enough about encouraging redundancy.

Step Eighteen: If you hear a conversation on a local repeater, break in and ask how each station is receiving you. Of course they will only see the signal of the repeater you are using, but it's that magic moment when you can find a fellow "LID", and get the report. Extra points are awarded if you are using a base station, and the repeater is less than twenty-five air miles from you.

Step Nineteen: Use the repeater for an hour or two at a time, preventing others from using it. Better yet, do it on a daily basis. Your quest is to make people so sick of hearing your voice every time they turn on their radio, they'll move to another frequency. This way you'll lighten the load on the repeater, leaving even more time for you to talk on it.

Step Twenty: See just how much flutter you can generate by operating at handheld power levels too far away from the repeater. Engage people in conversations when you know they wont be able to copy half of what your saying. Even when they say your uncopyable, continue to string them along by making further transmissions. See just how frustrated you can make the other amateur before he finally signs off in disgust.

Step Twenty One: Use lots of radio jargon. After all, it makes you feel important using words ordinary people don't say. Who cares if it makes you sound like you just fell off Channel 19 on the citizen's Band? Use phrases such as "Roger on that", "10-4", "I'm on the side", "Your making the trip" and "Negatory on that".

Step Twenty Two: Use excessive microphone gain. See just how loud you can make your audio. Make sure the audio gain is so high that other amateurs can hear any bugs crawling on your floor. If mobile, make sure the wind noise is loud enough that others have to strain to pick your words out from all the racket.

Step Twenty Three: Start every transmission with the word "Roger" or "QSL". Sure, you don't need to acknowledge that you received the other transmission in full. After all, you would simply ask for a repeat if you missed something. But consider it your gift to the other amateur to give him solace every few seconds that his transmissions are being received.

Step Twenty Four: When looking for a contact on a repeater, always say your "listening" or "monitoring" multiple times. I've always found that at least a half dozen times or so is good. Repeating your multiple "listening" ID's every 10 to 15 seconds is even better. Those people who didn't want to talk to you will eventually call you, hoping you'll go away after you have finally made a contact.

Step Twenty Five: Always use a repeater, even if you can work the other station easily on simplex ... especially if you can make the contact on simplex. The coverage of the repeater you use should be inversely proportional to your distance from the other station.

Step Twenty Six: When on repeaters using courtesy tones, you should always say "over". Courtesy tones are designed to let everyone know when you have unkeyed but don't let that stop you. Say "over", "back to you" or "go ahead". It serves no useful purpose but don't worry, it's still fun!

Step Twenty Seven: Use the repeater's autopatch for frivolous routine calls... especially during morning or evening commute times. While pulling into the neighborhood, call home to let them know you'll be there in two minutes.... or, call your spouse to complain about the bad day you had at work. After all, the club has "measured rate" service on their phone line so they get charged for each autopatch call. Your endeavor is to make so many patches in a year that you cost the club at least $20 in phone bills. That way you'll feel you got your money's worth for your dues!

Step Twenty Eight: Never say "My name is ....." It makes you sound human. If at all possible, use one of the following phrases: a) "The personal here is ..." b) "The handle here is..."

Step Twenty Nine: Use "73" and "88" incorrectly. Both are already considered plural, but add a "s" to the end anyway. Say "73's" or "88's". Who cares if it means "best regards" and "love and kisses." Better yet, say "seventy thirds"! (By the way, seventy thirds equals about 23.3).

Step Thirty: If the repeater is off the air for service, complain about the fact that it was off the air as soon as it's turned back on. Act as though your entire day has been ruined because the repeater wasn't available when you wanted to use it. Even thought you have never paid a penny to help out with the upkeep of it.

My landlord was a no-code ham and he didn't want me to have an antenna because he didn't want me to have fun making CW contacts, so I slapped the shit out of him and now I have a 5 element tri-bander up 100 feet and I made him pay for it. Secretly, the ARRL would like to see the code requirement go away, but they can't display that outwardly because it will make them look like they are against having good skilled hams. Rest assured, when the code requirement is eliminated, the ARRL (Anti-Radio-Relay-League) with try to come up with a way to capitalize on the dumbing down of the service so they can get more money in the corporate bank account.

Yeah, you're right, I forgot about that - but then again, I've never been in a spot to "test" that! After I read your reply - I recalled some statements on various FCC forms regarding such.

I wonder if that is because - too easy to say it all "verbally" and well - with code - one wouldn't have quite as big an audience - therefore the aggressor wouldn't be able to make himself/herself look bigger when in actuality - we know it is the opposite. Most people don't copy MOST messages in code - or ANY for that matter - unless looking for the call to be next in line, wanting to join in, practicing copying code.

Yes, but the point is - the discussion was <somewhat> leaning towards a study of "criminals" in Ham radio! It is far easier to commit crimes with "cell"! AND as we all know - some people can't talk and chew bubble gum at the same time. I don't care if you're (meaning anyone) in a house, phone booth, or in your car with a cell phone - if you have a person who talks a lot with the hands, guess what is going to be happening as they're driving! The hands come off the wheel and whalah - lost control. I've seen people reading news papers and driving, watching TV, talking on their cells AND using the hands - a LOT. Women putting on make-up - no hands on wheels, etc. So - I'll not place "all" the blame on Cell phones - but rather the people who can't use them - shall we say - "safely".

That went away with all the other rights such as the right to use a telephone without fear of the government listening in (without a court order) and losing your pilot license if a neighbor gets pissed at you for something and calls homeland security and says you're a threat (no due process in that case, they just automatically yank it I'm told). Very sad to see such abuse of power. I think everyone should vote every elected official out at the next opportunity. Let's start with a clean slate and make the lousy reps get regular jobs like the rest of us.

NO! The sky is NOT falling!

No Dee, "the people" are the gov't. Let me give you an example.

No one in his or her right mind would ever trust any president, representive, or group of them to decide whether an individual dies or not (or any other group of bueraucrats either!) We would only allow citizens to do that. It is called a jury and there are 12 of them to make sure they get it right (yes, I know, there are still far too many mistakes and DNA evidence has released a sizeable number from death row--perhaps with DNA evidence we can increase our accuracy a bit.)

Well, the FCC is just like that. And we should never trust them to make a really important decision for us. The FCC can only do its' job correctly if all 350 million of us are looking over their shoulders and telling them what to do. Trouble is, my president, senators and reps look a bit raggy around the edges, even to the point of making me think they are corrupt criminals. I am trusting they will get around to fix that soon ... <straight face>

If someone is a lazy ass laying around trusting their gov't to do it for them or for the other citizens, he or she is far from a great Amerian. A great American is always active in making sure the peoples voice is heard.

What makes America great is everyones' right to free speech, activism, protests, etc. It will all shake out in the end, any one mans/womans opinion, or even any one group of men and women is unimportant in the much larger picture.

In the final say, only the people have a right to place limits and they only need to place limits to keep one from infringing on another, but you already know that, our founding fathers documents could serve as no better example, they need no "interpretation" on what anyone person thinks they either are or are not--that is difficult enough.

JS

I know I am. What's that got to do with my opinion that I stated?
And people like you (I assume you say I'm full of shit for wanting to vote out deadbeats) keep voting the useless crumbs back into office, year after year. I will clarify a bit though...yes you still have a right to own your own home. You just might not be able to use it for what you want (does Michigan require land use permits?) If I want to put a private use runway on my property I have to get a permit and the county sends letters to all adjoining property owners to see if there are objections. To me, my airplane is a recreational vehicle. Why doesn't the county send me a letter to see if I object to neighbors using THEIR recreational vehicles (snowmobiles, ATV, etc.) running them up and down behind my house at 2AM when the bars let out?

You are getting very confused. I'm not the one that is panicking over changes. I've already said several times that I'm am not worried about the changes.

I've not said anything to the contrary. I've repeatedly said that society (i.e. the people) find it necessary to have rules to insure the health of the society.

I've never advocated that. Each person has a right to be heard. But you forget that each person has their own opinion. Should your opinion have any more weight than mine or vice versa?

It's already been pointed out to you that our founding fathers included the Supreme Court for the very purpose of "interpreting" the Constitution.

How has code kept you and Robesin out of amateur radio and off the air?
It's not an effective filter.

Not hardly. I was discussing the fact that OTHER people consider it a filter. I have never, ever made any statement to that effect. I was discussing OTHER'S opinions and fears for the enlightenment of the ham from another country who asked why it was such a big deal here.

Just because I chose to discuss the opinions presented by some does NOT mean agree to. I would never agree to a CCA . My home is my castle.
I subscribe to those opinions.

I choose to live far enough out that I can pretty much do as I please . I can fire a gun , or whatever in my front yard and no nosy neighbor is going to call the police. Also I don't need to ask permission or get a zoning variance to erect an antenna . I lived in town for 12 years . Never again . Ace - WH2T

When I said, "NO! The sky is NOT falling!" I meant we have firmly decided that! I caught that you were stepping away from other amateurs decrying the death of ham radio due to changes ... it was satire and I see how it could be taken much differently ...

I read over you text much too quickly and was quick to take a much different spin on it that the one I see now.

Yes. The supreme courts whole reason for existence is to enforce the constitution to the letter, you are, again, correct, strange no one is seems more upset by the gross inability of it to have done so in recent decades ...

ALL police officers and sheriffs should be drafted, and go through a "boot camp." At the end of 12 weeks of boot, we press them into service for a four year term. The pay scale is fair and adjusted for special cases. But, we all accept this as our duty. With this one change we could just about completely remove corruption and restore respect to law enforcement. Plus, the added benefit would probably be an overall reduced cost to the tax payer.

But, this is only one change in a sea of changes I would make. Many I see are disenfranchised by gov't playing a mother/father role for them, this was never meant to be. I don't need a president, senator or rep "with a plan", I simply need them to be honest and upfront with the people, then represent the peoples wishes--this seems almost opposite from what I am experiencing. If I can trust 12 men with my life on a jury, then I can darn well trust 350 million governing ourselves beside me ...

>> (13) A quarter of homosexuals have admitted to sex with children and >> underaged teens, (6,5,8) suggesting the homosexuality is introduced to >> youngsters the same way other behaviors are learned - by experience.
>> 4) Early homosexual experiences influence adult patterns of behavior
>> In the 1980s, scholars (12) examined the early Kinsey data to determine >> whether or not childhood sexual experiences predicted adult behavior.
>> The results were significant: Homosexual experience in the early year,

>> It is remarkable that the three largest empirical studies of the >> 3. Unusual sexual experience, particularly in early childhood:

>> precocious or excessive masturbation >> exposure to pornography in childhood >> depersonalized sex (e.g., group sex, sex with animals)
>> or girls, sexual interaction with adult males >> 4. Cultural influences:
>> a visible and socially approved homosexual sub-culture that invites >> pro-homosexual sex education >> was with a teacher)

>> societal and legal toleration of homosexual acts >> depictions of homosexuality as normal and/or desirable behavior

>> Can homosexuality be changed?

Thanks Ace...

I guess one of my buttons got pushed...I just think it's such a shame that people in general (and I'm guilty of it too) just look the other way at "bad government" and let elected officials get away with the stuff they do. I mean, how many of us would get to break laws at work and not get fired? MAYBE government would get better if elected officials actually feared voters? 2 cents worth...

Begin, Mark, by undoing the damage you have already caused to No-Code Technicians.

There is hardly an "our number" in the equation. You are the lone crybaby in this group, Mark.

Your incessant hand-wringing and petulant whining about the CW requirement is getting old.

Go cry somewhere else. Your complaints are falling on deaf ears.

Wrong.

The amateur rules were not called Part 97 then.

You are criticizing one person for putting a spark coil on the air as a small boy, yet have no criticism of someone who intentionally put an unlicensed transmitter on the air as a teenager. Both events occurred more than 50 years ago.

Who should have known better - the small boy or the teenager?

Yup - as long as those consumers know what they are getting into.

In more than a few places, the buyer doesn't know a house has covenants unless they ask exactly the right questions and insist on the answers in writing. Many folks live in houses with very restrictive covenants without ever realizing it, because they don't do anything that violates the covenants.

One of the ironies of all this is that covenanted properties tend to appreciate in value more slowly than unrestricted ones. This makes them less expensive - and more popular with buyers.

When I bought my present house, the real estate agent had no idea about any restrictions concerning this property. After a lot of digging they were uncovered.

Hopefully not literally!

The real kicker in all of this is the buyer who doesn't know the right questions to ask,
and how to evaluate the answers. A verbal statement by the agent, owner or anybody else is worthless when confronted by legally recorded covenants in black-and-white.

These questions have to be asked up-front - preferably before even looking at a property.

Always remember that RE agents don't make any money until a sale closes.

Generally neighborhoods don't put them together. Homeowners associations and the related CCR's found in the deed are usually required by either city or county planning commissions as a tradeoff for denser than normal housing in planned communities. With those restrictions you usually get community open space and some level of community recreation facilities, etc.

Whether they are good or bad or something in-between really depends on what you want in your locality. Some of us enjoy the freedom to do more-or-less what ever we want with our house. Along with that right comes the responsibility to acccept whatever your next-door-neighbor does with his house. About 10 miles away is a community with out a HOA that is composed of 80 year old well maintained brick or wood colonial houses. One guy has painted his brick home contrasting colors of purple, pink and blue. Another puts fills up most of his yard with at least 100 beatup plastic santas and other xmas paraphernalia. And yet a third house has a very large oak that was chainsaw sculpted to look like a 30 foot nude with huge breasts and 2 large branches made into arms extended open toward the house. And these are neighborhoods with houses that sell for $900,000 and up.

I would prefer to not have stuff like that next door and am willing to trade off the right to paint my mailbox any color.

> Covenant communities should be outlawed.

Why should they be outlawed? If you don't like them just move to a location where there isn't a home owners association.

> Whatever > happened to a man's home being his castle (i.e. personal property rights)?

What specifically are personal property rights. I have yet to find the locality where you can do anything you want on your property.

Code by hand/ear is a quaint skill much loved by old geezers. Just like knowing how to use a slide-rule. Interesting for historical reasons... but not very useful otherwise. And old geezers kick the bucket... so in the end change comes by the minds of the young. Welcome to the 21st century, Marconi.

SC, I remember what happened to the net with the introduction of AOL "newbies". So I can relate to your fears. But I think that scenario will only play out if code AND written exams are abolished. I don't think your average CB'er could pass the technician exam without code.

Now, psychology... lazy people as a rule don't have frustration over their laziness. They only get frustrated by biological needs. Why? because they are L A Z Y.

Tenants do indeed suck. Take John Griffin for instance.

He's always late with the rent and when he does get it together on last day before eviction notices go out, he pays it lots of small dirty bills that have been God knows where.

Even though the lease stipulates NO PETS, John raises gerbils and collects toilet paper tubes. Have you ever smelled gerbil shit?

Then there are the overnight guests who never leave. John's trailer comfortably accomodates four. But between his mom's tricks and his loser friends, there's always at least ten folks there clogging up the septic system.

Parking is always an issue. In addition to John's shit brown '76 Pacer the above mentioned hangers-on park their assorted trucks, old cabs and pre 80's GM sedans with torn vinyl roofs in such a manner that the short bus that John rides to the special school district can't get through.

I heard a bunch of them also. After doing research on QRZ it appears they were all 20 WPM Extra Class hams. Passing a code test doesn't mean a damn thing. It's old, outdated, and useless. Code - old - who cares, time to more on and get the old dying farts out of this service.

and there of course you are plain wrong

Neither Morse code nor cw has been truly basic to Ham radio at any time in our history in making this statement you spout bogus propaganda

Morse Code has NOTHING whatever to do with radio it just so happens to exist and was apllied to first spark (which sure isn't CW) as it was applied to various wired aplication indeed the Morse Code test know even prove one can use Morse Code (as can be seen by skimming the threads bashing newbie code users on QRZ) indeed with you Dee we have a clear case of the dmage done the ARS by Code testing

we have an extra class our most tested therefore in theory our most knowledgable class of hma making down right stupid statement about what Ham radio is now it isn't entirely her fault of course she is product of th e system foisted on one by the FCC allowing the ARRL to decide what we needed to be real hams

it is rather like the case in B5 of Akara 7 where the leader fed propagnad about what made a real Akaran to leath weapons and turned them loose during an invasion the result was the they repelled the in vasion and killed off all of the inhabitants of Akara 7 as well

Dee Flint is a poster child for what went wrong with incentive licensing

in many cases we CAN indeed kill those that inpinge on our rights

Here in Michigan I can as can you Kill to defend yourself or your property the laws inhibiting were pared back effective around the first of OCT of this year in other case we may indeed argue some form of justifaction for even the act of homocide in defense of our right

WRONG. At age 15. It was a "wireless broadcaster" then very common and legal as a wireless coupling for phonographs to play through a radio. Ranged a whole half block away to a sensitive portable receiver at my buddy's house.

A year later, in 1948, I MAY have inadvertently sent RF out in using a light bulb dummy load on a converted ARC-5 transmitter. Not being close to the prestigious ivy-league rarified genius atmosphere of eastern Pennsy (who still think they "invented" the electronic computer), I was unaware of such inadvertent transmissions...the dummy load was a suggestion of the two hams who owned H & H Electronics (that sold the surplus ARC gear).

But, Mother Superior, apparently having acquired a "law degree" certificate, thinks she can "bring me up on charges" in front of the FCC now for "bootlegging" 59 years ago?

>Perhaps that is why he wanted to keep anyone under the age of 14 out of >amateur radio.

Tsk, tsk. Mother just doesn't let anything DIE. She must be the mother of Methuselah. All who commit transgressions in her eyes must suffer eternal fires of hell. Wow, some spirit of comradship in radio she has(n't).

Mother Superior has too much time on her hands, bearing ill will to anyone who doesn't love, honor, and obey morsemanship.

One major problem for Mother is that she won't acknowledge her own mistakes...such as the two-three above. She will "blame" ANOTHER by trying to misdirect the thread flow to them...thereby diverting the flow and getting her jollies by shitting on any no-code-test advocates.

What about Heil's name calling and Heil's bootlegging?

Mother Superior rejoinder: Heil and Kelly are LICENSED hams. [they are also morsemen, 20 WPM tested gods of radio operating but Mother won't mention that directly]

It is very OK for any morseman to do anything in radio with impunity. It is NOT OK for any no-code-test advocate to do any such thing.

Mother Superior has a DOUBLE STANDARD flying in the wind for all to see.

WHAT?!? A double-degreed "expert" on EVERYTHING and you have to ASK QUESTIONS about simple things? Tsk, tsk.

>You are criticizing one person for putting a spark coil on the air as a >small boy, yet have no criticism of someone who intentionally put an >unlicensed transmitter on the air as a teenager. Both events occurred >more than 50 years ago.

Yes, more than 50 years ago. Before Miccolis was conceived.
Before Miccolis got his federally-authorized radio fishing license. Before Miccolis entered the novitiate of the Church of St. Hiram and became a morseperson. Before Miccolis invented radio, computers, management staff positions, or whizzy spread rectum communications. That latter carried on in here, of course...

>Who should have known better - the small boy or the teenager?

Neither. James Miccolis SHOULD KNOW BETTER.

James Miccolis should cease this double-damned misdirection technique and acknowledge that morsepersons are equally guilty of certain acts and NOT jumping off to "blame" a no-code-test advocate as a "defense."

Mother Superior should "safe" her knuckle-spank ruler and rip off that nasty habit of allegedly "pointing out errors" which aren't errors. She won't though, and that's the pity.
Her ego is too large and she cannot ever admit to her doing any wrong at any time. Morsepersons are always perfect.

Jimmie-boy ought to make a macro of his "charge" of "wanting to ban all hams under 14" as a heinous crime against hamanity. That was a SUGGESTION I made to the FCC in 1999, on public display at the FCC ECFS, and is a 7-year-old thing that was ALREADY discussed at length in here years ago. But Jimmie-boy won't let it die as I did...he MUST keep bringing it back to show how AWFUL such a thing is, how HORRID to his emotional being. Why?

One reason for "why" is that he has NO valid reason for the FCC to keep the code test for any amateur radio license.
All he has is some emotional tie to "tradition" as seen by His eyes and spirit. He did it so everyone else must do it.
His brain has been thoroughly washed by the ARRL so everyone else must think the same way.

It's 1984 deja-vu for US amateur radio?

Hello, Jim, Dave, Steve, Dee, and Len. No write to for a long time! I hope I find everyone well and happy.

A humble request if I may?

Would there be any possibility of trimming the groups these posts get sent to? Certainly these are unusual topics to be appearing in rec.radio.amateur antenna and the other unrelated groups.

The folks I have plonked out certainly won't cease the practice, in fact I just invite more of it with this post. But I can't imagine that you good folk would ever intend to be part of the massive and perverted crossposting metastasis that has been going on for the past several months.

But your names sometimes show up along with the sewage, just thought I'd let you know. 8^)

"When I told Abbie Hoffman that he was the first one who made me laugh since Lenny Bruce died, Hoffman said, "Really? He was my god." The combination of satirical irreverence and sense of justice that Bruce and Hoffman shared was the real spirit behind the Yippies--a term I coined to describe a phenomenon that already existed: an organic coalition of stoned hippies and political activists who engaged in such actions as throwing money on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, then explaining to reporters the meaning of that symbolism. Folksinger Phil Ochs summed it up: "A demonstration should turn you on, not turn you off." So when journalists link the Yippies with misleading bedfellows, at best it's careless shorthand; at worst it's deliberate demonization. Osama bin Laden wanted an aircraft to crash into the Pentagon. Abbie Hoffman merely wanted to levitate it." -- Paul Krassner, http://tinyurl.com/ehu3v

The member of our team that is finishing the final draft of the Request for Discussion (RFD) agreed to a firm deadline of January 1, 2007. The team has reviewed, and agreed to, prior working drafts of the RFD, as well as submission guidelines for the proposed new newsgroup, so this is just cleanup and tweaking at this point. The submission guidelines were recently posted to misc.test.moderated. We will have an RFD to pass along to the news.announce.newsgroups moderator to crosspost to this newsgroup shortly after January 1st. Moving the discussion period to after Christmas is also desirable in order to have a bigger audience for the RFD, and give everyone ample opportunity to provide feedback free of holiday distractions and time demands.

In the meantime, we've been testing the robomoderation software, Secure Team-Based Usenet Moderation Program (STUMP). Several rec.radio.amateur.policy participants have graciously agreed to send us test submissions, many of which we have approved and posted to misc.test.moderated. At this point, anyone reading this newsgroup is welcome to send us test postings. Send such submissions to:

rec-radio-amateur-moderated@panix.com

We'll process them as if they were actual submissions to the proposed moderated newsgroup. Anything we approve will be posted to misc.test.moderated, so please don't send anything to that address that you don't want posted to Usenet, or at least add the text "not for publication" or "do not approve." We would be particularly interested in test postings that are PGP signed.

Watch this space for further information after the first of the year.

When you posted to rrap as "Avery Fine" (averyfine@aol.com) the headers did not identify the author as you.

More irrelevance and attempted misdirection.

The fact is that you posted to rrap under that screen name, and then denied it. Now you want us to accept that you have never tried to be anonymous in rrap.

"Faux pas"? Hardly.

How about "mistake"?

How about "error"?

It's even possible you were trying to deceive us.

I simply state the facts: You posted to rrap under a screen name, then denied ever doing so. Now you want us to believe your statements about how you've never tried to be anonymous in rrap.

Why should anyone believe you?

Why is any of that relevant to amateur radio policy, Len?

None of it makes your opinions somehow automatically correct.
Nor even a little more valid than mine.

The fact is that you're not a radio amateur, have never been one,
and have only been involved as a spectator.

> 6. You won't admit that radio communications exists

That's simply not true, Len. You're just plain wrong about that.

What I won't do is to value your non-amateur-radio experience as being a magical mystery route to how amateur radio should be regulated.

Not anything. Just your mistakes, errors, and faulty logic.

No, only if it's funny. You're not funny.

Actually, Len, that's a pretty good description of how you behave!

You get all upset when someone comes along and doesn't acknowledge and bow down to your lordly "superiority" in everything.

How?

How does being a member of a nonamateur industry organization make your opinion about amateur radio regulations more valid? Particularly since you're not a radio amateur, not part of the FCC or other radio regulatory agency, and have no experience in such areas other than spamming FCC with comments?

Where did I claim that?

How do you know I am not a member of any professional engineering organizations, Len?

Why is that relevant?

I've been a radio amateur since 1967. You have never been a radio amateur.
That is relevant.

Recycled and reused parts into an amateur radio station that served me for years, Len.

Can you show any amateur radio transmitter or receiver projects?

insurance...

I'm not Catholic either, Len.

Your use of insulting nicknames against others is just another example of your immaturity and inability to tolerate differing opinions.

Hardly a "faux pas", Len.

It was a mistake - an error - possibly even an attempt to mislead us....

You're trying to misdirect again, Len.

So what? The fact remains that there were no Bear bombers deployed when you were in Japan, regardless of your claims.

> You were safe at home

How safe, Len? How long would it take Soviet ICBMs to reach the USA?
How about
Soviet submarine-launched missiles?

If the buttons were pushed, how many minutes did those of us "safe at home" have left?

What defenses did we civilians have against such attack?

> and could freely point fingers at and

All I did was point out your mistakes, Len. You sure have a hard time with that.

Would it make any difference if I did? I've seen how you act towards others with military experience, including those with more military experience than you. In all cases, their military experience is simply something for you to make fun of, if they disagree with you.

> 2. You have NO PhD...in anything.

How do you know for sure, Len?

I have a BSEE and MSEE, and I've seen how you act about it.
A Ph.D would just be another thing for you to make fun of.

Do you even have a bachelor's degree, Len? I think not. Yet you make fun of those more educated than you, if they dare to disagree with your opinions, or to correct your mistakes.

> 3. You have NO "multiple patents" (such as Brian Kelly's "26").

Would it make any difference if I did? How many patents would it take for you to consider someone's opinion on amateur radio policy to be more valid than yours?

> 4. We don't know WHO you work for...or your position there.

What difference could it possibly make? You show no respect for others' work if they disagree with you. What job would cause you to consider someone's opinion on amateur radio policy
to be more valid than yours?

And about their name, ethnicity, religion, gender, physical appearance, age, employment,
military and/or government service, education, geographic location and anything else you care to insult.

It's what you do, Len, when someone dares to disagree with you. Heck, sometimes you do it even before the person has a chance to agree or disagree with you.

Very immature behavior by you.

I don't claim to be an expert about anything, Len. Yet you attack me anyway,
because I know more than you about some things, and dared to disagree with you and correct some of your mistakes.

What you do is called "attacking the messenger".

> The same goes for your alleged expertise in aerospace...or

There you go again - attack the messenger rather than deal in facts.

Seems you equate "respect" with "agreement". If someone disagrees with your opinions,
you consider it an insult, and proceed to attack the person.

Insecure, too.

Now you're really being immature. And insecure.

Grow up a little, Len. Learn to deal with differing opinions.

Then maybe you'll get some respect.

As a matter of fact, cub scouts radio projects are RECEIVING/LISTENING ONLY projects, not transmitting projects. He'd have to wait for Boy Scouts for that.

A check on the FCC web site shows the license is still valid. W5OER was listed to another individual but expired in 1998. W5OER is now a vanity call sign assigned to Mr. Cox. Aside from an address change in July of 2004 there have been no status changes attached to this call sign.

I always suspected you were a chicken bander. As undoubtedly, the answer to your question, hands down, would be chicken bander's, or "The Bandits of the Road" (truckers.)

Since 24 hours a day these men drive the highways and respond to emergencies on the 11 meter band, call for assistance for those with 11 meter band capabilities, call law enforcement, for ambulances, advise other drivers of road conditions, call in dangerous and suspicious situations they observe on the road, etc., etc., etc.

Yep, yer a good ole buddie cb'er, ten four good buddy? <wink>
